

A JOURNAL OF TIBETAN LITERATURE, ARTS AND HUMANITIES

SPECIAL ISSUE

HOPE THAT BURNS, FRIENDSHIP THAT HEALS:

AN ANTHOLOGY BY TIBETAN WOMEN WRITERS

Guest Edited by Erin Burke, Jue Liang, Tashi Dekyid Monet & Andrew S. Taylor

A Journal of Tibetan Literature, Art and Humanities Vol. 5, No. 1 (2025) Special Issue

यार्था उत्र श्रुेश अदे र्हें स रेया के न श्रेया में या्या ग्री नृर्था सा

Hope That Burns, Friendship That Heals: An Anthology by Tibetan Women Writers

Guest Edited by Erin Burke, Jue Liang, Tashi Dekyid Monet, Andrew S. Taylor

Cover Image:
KULHA, Untitled (2021))
Acrylic, 20×30 cm
Courtesy of the artist

Yeshe: A Journal of Tibetan Literature, Arts and Humanities is an open access, peer-reviewed, annual journal that publishes academic articles, reviews, and interviews related to Tibet, as well as poetry, performance, prose, art, and fiction. It was co-founded in 2020 by Dr. Patricia Schiaffini-Vedani and Dr. Shelly Bhoil with the support of Tibetan Arts and Literature Initiative. Yeshe also welcomes proposals of themed-based special issues.

The authors agree to license their work in Yeshe under Creative Commons Attribution-NonCommercial-NoDerivatives 4.0 International.

Copyright ©2025 authors

ISSN 2768-4261 (Online)

Masthead

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF: Patricia Schiaffini-Vedani (editor@yeshe.org)

MANAGING EDITOR: Shelly Bhoil (info@yeshe.org)

FICTION EDITOR: Christopher Peacock (fiction@yeshe.org)

PROSE EDITOR: Kati Fitzgerald (prose@yeshe.org)

POETRY EDITOR: Lekey Leidecker (poetry@yeshe.org)

INTERVIEW EDITOR: Tenzin Dickie (interview@yeshe.org)

ARTS EDITOR: Nawang Tsomo Kinkar (art@yeshe.org)

PERFORMING ARTS EDITOR: Tsering Samdrup (performance@yeshe.org)

ACADEMIC ARTICLES EDITOR: Andrew Taylor (articles@yeshe.org)

REVIEW EDITOR: Kalsang Yangzom & Shelly Bhoil

(review@yeshe.org)

COPYEDITOR: Alex MacDonald

WEBMASTER: Tenzin Thinley & Tenzin Sonam

GRAPHIC DESIGNER: Tenzin Sonam

Associate Editors: Dhondup Tashi Rekjong, Enrique Galván-Álvarez, Chime Lama

Advisory Board: Françoise Robin, Pema Tseden, Pema Bhum, Tsering Topgyal, Carole McGranahan, Clare Harris, Nicole Willock

Table of Contents

र्ह ें अ [.] श्रेण' रादे ' गानुस्रा	7
Editorial Introduction Erin Burke, Jue Liang, Tashi Dekyid Monet, Andrew S. Taylor	13
Introduction: Women's Literature - Vistas of Modern Tibetan Trauma Janet Gyatso
5'55'प्र'र्जरे'ग्राज्ञ कुर्जु (Tales of Myself and Snow) ఇक्के'बोर्ज् Chimé (Trans. Tashi Dekyid Monet and David Germano)	28
55-র্মু-অর্ম-গ্রী-শ্ল-অম-ড্যুর-উন্ম (Dreaming at the Sage's Abode) মুত্র-অন্ত্র-মূর্-মা Kelsang Lhamo (Trans. Kelsang Lhamo and Miranda Smith	h) 47
জ'মনি'অন্'ক্কম'ন্ন্ন'না (Remembering My Mother's Handmade Tsampa খ্লীন'খ্লুন'মন্নিনা Min-Nangzey (Trans. Annabella Pitkin)
স্ব্রা'নী'জ'ম'স্ম'মর'ম্বা'নিমা (My Father's Skills) মু'নিমা Lung Rinchen (Trans. Patricia Schiaffini-Vedani)	75
দ্র্'মীম'ঘনি'ম'র্মুদ্য (Silent Dusk) ক্র'র্মুব'ষ্ক্রিদ্য Tsedrön Kyi (Trans. Erin Burke and Eben Yonnetti)	92

爱是一双出发的箭 (Love Is a Pair of Unloosed Arrows)
白玛娜珍 ちょうない Baimanazhen (Trans. Jue Liang and Andrew S. Taylor)
The Lottery (ক্লুব্র-প্রিশ-নি) Tenzin Dickie বশ্বর বেইব্র-বেই শ্লুন্মির (Trans. Dhondup T. Rekjong) 131
Somewhere Else (শ.ช.ฦาฦาสั่รุ) Tsering Wangmo Dhompa ชุ๊มราชิวริรารุกราสัๆ (Trans. Dhondup T. Rekjong)

क्रिंग श्रीमा प्रदेशमानुस्य

न्यात्रा उत् भ्रेत्रा सार्डेसामार्यदे र्डेसामेना केन् श्रेना दिने हे श्रेन्से १ वर्ष १ वर्ष से सि र्वेन् स्रितेः र्हेसान्तेना सहन् हेसान् बेह्सान् सुन्य स्रित्या अवस्य स्त्रीत् स्त्रीतः स्त्रीत्रासा वर् वा विवास वरे हिंसा वा दें। इससा ग्री हिंसा देवा वा हे सा व तृ स्वी वा वर्षे श्लोदा है वा सा ૡઽૢૻ૽ૺ૽૽ૢ૽ૺ૽૽ૼૺ૾૽ૢ૽ૢ૾ૹ૾૽ૢ૽ૹ૾ૺૹૻૹૻૹ૱ૹ૽૽ૢ૽ૺૹૻ૽ઌૹ૱ૹ૽ૢ૾ૢૺૹૹ૽૽૽૽ૼૹઌ૽૽ૡ૽૽ૼૹ૾૽ૡઽૢ૽ૡૺૺૼૹૹૡ૽ૻૡ૽ૺ૽ૺ  नेद्र-डेबा-वन्दर्हेना-बुबा देन-वेद्-दब्य-बेवबा-पदे-क्टेंबा-वर्ध-विक्रय-द्रा क्रु-वार-दब्य *ড়*ॱरेॱद'नत्न्वश्यदेरेईस'य'र्ये'नशुस्रानरुशर्हिद'तुर् *ষेব*ঝ'নই`৻ইঅ'ন'র্ই'বার্ট্টঝা *बेद-*र्क्केंब्र-स-र्से-नरुब-धुव्य-देर्देश-शु-बेनक-धेंद्-व्य| क्वेंब्र-स-र्से-नडिन-दु-व्य्वेत्य-नक्कुट-दुक्य-देवा'सदे'ळेद्'स्रावश्र'सः श्रुःदरः। द्रशेवाश'त्रश्रव्य'र्वेदः ग्रीः हेंसः देवा'र्वे' दूं त'दर वित'यह्वा' यः श्रॅन्याश्वासः स्वास्त्रास्त्र स्वासः स  ૽૽ૼૺ૱ૠ૽ૼૼઽ૽ૹ૾૽ૺ૾૽ૼૼ૱ૠ૾૽ૼઌૢૻૹૄ૽ૺ૾૽ઽઽૡૢઌૢૻઌ૱૱ૢૺૹૢ૽ૺ૱ૹૡ૽ૺ૽૽ૼૼ૱ૠ૽૾ઌૢૻ૽૽ૹ૽૽ૢૼ૾ૼૹૼઌૢૼ૱ૡ૾ૢૺઌૣ૱ૡ૱ ૾ૼૼૼૹ੶ਖ਼੶ૡ૽ૼ੶ઽૣૠૢૢૺૹ੶ૹ૽૽૱ૠૢ૽૾ૡૼૼૼૼઽ૱ਗ਼੶ਗ਼૾૽૽૽૱ૹ૱૱૱૽૽૾૽ૼૹ੶૱ઌ૽૽૽ૼ૱ૡ૽૽ૼ૱ सवै नर्जे ज्ञेर न्र-न्र-न्याय क्रेंब क्री अहं न क्रें रेअ न्र-रेअ स क्रूर न्र-र व्रक्र क्रा रेन्। न्येर व। वेशःश्रृंदःवेदःगवेशःददःवेदःगशुसःग्रीःवेद। अःदेवेःदुःसरःश्लेंदाः केद (Harvard)। र्मि'य्यस'ने'प्यू'र्स्नेन'ळेत (Columbia) ह्नि'र्से'र्स्'रेने'र्झे' सूर्न्स्सेन'ळेत्(Colorado-Boulder)। तुनः जुनः र्र्भूनः क्रेत् (Northwestern)। ङ्वः नतः शेवेः क्रुवः विनः ग्रीः वृनः र्वेन्'नक्तुन्'त्रन'नक्षृत्र'ची:क्षुेश'ळेत्र'यदे'नह्रस्य'ळेंश'न्न'कृ'न| से'ळे'र्येपाश'गर्डे'स्वेन'य'

केन् श्चेना ब्रन्द्र ते क्षित्र क्षेत्र क्षेत

ह्राच्यूर्याच्युं भीचभात्तर्भ्याच्यूं स्थान्य स्थान्य

्रांत्रह्मात्र्यात्वात्त्र्यात्त्र्याः न्यात्त्र्याः न्यात्त्र्याः न्यात्त्र्याः न्यात्त्र्यः न्यात्त्र्यः न्यात्त्र्यः न्यात्त्र्यः न्यात्त्रः न्याः न्यात्त्रः न्याः न्यः न्याः न

ग्वित् केन् श्रेनायनेन्द्रस्था स्तर्भे स्तर्भ

२०२०वेदिः तृत्यस्य ग्रीः क्रीतः व्याप्त प्राप्त प्र प्राप्त प्राप्त प्राप्त प्राप्त प्राप्त प्राप्त प्राप्त प्राप्त प

व्यः अनुमा प्रमाहित अवः अनु स्वादः स्त्रीता Andrew Taylor १। ५ ने निवासिक स्त्रीता न्नरः स्रिं Françoise Robin रे स्वाया क्षेत्र सहन स्रित् नात्र स्था न निर्देश स्वाया यह दर्देवे से मुनार सुना सुना साम से नाम स्मार्थे वे त्यां के त्र के त्र की के निष्ठे मात्र शा की निष्ठा के त्र के त्र के त्र के त्र के त्र के त्र के त Germano र्र्ना अर्भे प्यून्यन्ति (Ariana Maki र्र्मेर्मे मृत्यन्तरुषा देवा द्युद दें द्वाय प्राप्त का की शाक्षी अर्क्षिय अर्द दे की वा क्षु र प्र दे की द्वाय की महिराप्तर्ह्यम्याक्तेरान्त्रादानाहरूप्ति। केन् श्चेमाप्तने प्रिस्स श्चेमामीप्रमादाहरूपार्या র্নিরিজের:শ্রুব্র:রিপ্রুম: Andrew Taylor বিজ্ঞার ব্রন্তর্নার ক্রম শ্রীকান ইরি त्युअन्दर्क्षान्ध्रिन्यहेअन्ध्रवः क्षेत्राधेषान्यञ्चर्न्यक्षार्क्ष्यायार्थेन्दर्स्त्रेष् नरायान्त्रमञ्जी बसावनेता केन् भ्रीनायने यो सन्तर्भेना नी ने से से नेन् ग्री नार्वेद ૹૢૢૺ૱:૨૽ૺૹ૽ૼઃ૱ઌૢૻ૽ૡ૽ઌૡઌ૽ૻ૽૽૱ઌ૽ૻ૱૱૱ૢૢૺ૱૱૽૽ૼૺ૱૱૽૽ૼઌ૽૽૱૱૱૽૽ૢ૽ૡૢ૾૽ૡ૽૽ૡ૽ૺ૱૱ૡ૽૽ૺ૱ यायनानीय। देखें वदे याम ग्रुट द्येनया न सेया देना न न से दार्य प्राप्त में ગુઃસ્તુે અ અલે ભ્યમ ૧૬૫ સુદ ૧૬ ૧૧ અઅ ત્ર અ ક્રે અ ૧૫ ખેતુ કેમ વાલત સે અદ મેં આ સૂત્રા ૧૫ અઅ च्रियः सेन् ग्रीयः क्रुनः क्रुन् ग्वर्या प्रदायाया क्रियः सायायायाय हेवः के वृद्धे । क्रुयः च्रीवे वर्षे दॅर-५८-४५-प्यसम् नरे-८ह्मास-र्सेम्स-ग्री-र्ह्रम्-८हेर्स-विद-हु-क्रे-नदे-५स-भूनस-८ई-वर् वार्मियानम् निर्देशम् रेर्नेम् अर्थेम् अर्थन्य स्थानेन्य स्थानेन्य स्थानेन्य स्थानेन्य स्थानेन्य स्थानेन्य यःसःस्ट्रिस्यायाञ्चयाः तुःचगायः द्वेत्रः त्वे तुर्दे। ।

 र्श्वन्यातः हुँ ना नी भानक्षेत्रे न स्वरं न ना तर्ष्या त्या क्षेत्र स्वरं स्वरं स्वरं स्वरं स्वरं स्वरं स्वरं त्या मा त्यु मा स्वरं स्वरं

देत्यसर्भेनास्त्रे। र्विन्शेर्ड्सन्त्रनामिश्चर्न्द्रिन्यस्त्रे। वित्यसर्भेनास्त्रे। वित्यसर्भेनास्त्रे। वित्यसर्भेनास्त्रे। वित्यसर्भेनास्त्रे। वित्यसर्भेनास्त्रे। वित्यसर्भेनास्त्रेन्द्रिन्यस्त्रेन्द्रिन्द्रिन्यस्त्रेन्द्रम्तिन्द्रस्तिन्द्रम्तिन्द्रम्तिन्द्रस्तिन्द्रस्तिन्द्रस्तिन्द्रस्तिन्द्रस्तिन्द्रस्तिन्द्रम्तिन्द्रस्तिन्द्रस्तिन्द्रस्तिन्द्रस्तिन्द्रस्तिन्द्रस्तिन्यस्तिन्द्रस्तिन्द्रस्तिन्द्रस्तिन्द्रस्तिन्द्रस्तिन्द्रस्तिन्यस्तिन्तिन्द्रस

यानशास्त्र श्री शास्त्र हिंसाने वा विश्व कर्ष स्त्र वा वा स्तर्त हिंदा श्री वा स्तर्त हिंसा श्री वा स्तर्त हिंसा हिंसा विश्व कर्ष स्त्र हिंदा हिंदा हिंसा हिंसा विश्व कर्ष हिंदा विश्व कर्ष हिंदा हिं

केन् श्चेना यने निर्श्वे कें १०११ वेदि नर्शे श्चेर निर्श्वे श्वेर श्चेत स्त्री श्चेर स्त्री श्चेर स्त्री स

न्दः सं ते त्यः स्वश्वा विवानी श्वा ते हे ते हो त्यः १००१ व्यवि त्यः स्वि ना व्यव विवाद विवाद

ह्यान्यात्रक्ता सःम्यान्यात्रक्ता संस्थान्यात्रक्ता संस्थान्यात्रक्ता

श्रह्मानुर्देश । इत्याश्ची त्युद्धानुर्द्धान्य वाद्यान्य ठव्यार्थे अपाये त्यान्य त्यान्य त्यान्य त्यान्य त्यान्य त्यान्य त्यान्य इत्याश्ची त्युद्धानुर्द्धान्य वाद्यान्य ठव्यार्थे अपाये त्यान्य त्यान्य त्यान्य त्यान्य त्यान्य त्यान्य त्यान्य

Editorial Introduction

Erin Burke, Jue Liang, Tashi Dekyid Monet, Andrew S. Taylor

Tibetan contemporary literature (র্নির্'শ্রী'ব্রি'ম্বশ'র্ন্কর্ম'র্ম্ব্র্যা) not only depicts the complexity of modern relationships – in this volume alone, we see an illicit love affair that ends with the couple finding refuge as mountain meditators, a loving father work day and night to stitch his daughter a chuba for school, and a polyandrous marriage unravel through a silent cell phone – but has become a relational site in itself. Depictions of Tibetan lives, both human and more-thanhuman, make the Tibetan experience legible to Tibetans themselves, and, increasingly, to readers around the world. These lives, ordinary and extraordinary, dynamic and elusive, have rarely been visible to dominant cultures. For far too long, the Euro-American and Chinese worlds have persisted in seeing Tibetans either as the source of an "exotic" religion or a political dilemma to be solved. We are deeply grateful and excited for the opportunity to curate this anthology of works by Tibetan women writers that we hope enriches such provincial perspectives.

Given that recent critical studies have shown the close relationship between social taxonomizing and political subjugation, one may question the utility and limitations of using the terms "Tibetan" and "women" to organize this anthology. Writers of non-dominant groups of genders or races have often been seen as inferior to mainstream or whitestream writers, with such delimiting labels supporting their continued marginalization. Why then continue to use the category of "Tibetan women writers"? Although these are valid concerns, we believe that the categories of "Tibetan" and "woman" also have liberatory dimensions and can be used to critically challenge the liberal assumptions that erase other cultures and genders in favor of a "universal" literature that claims to transcend cultural and political categories. The lived contexts of the authors of these pieces are complex and diverse, and in their particularity represent a challenge to any attempt at universalization. Some are writing in Tibetan, some in Chinese, some in English. Many have lived in multiple countries or regions. The stories, essays, and poems offered here provide glimpses into lives of complex individuals inhabiting diverse worlds, from Himalayan retreats to exile schools, from a tailor's sewing-machine to a mother's tsampa box, belongings that the authors show are worlds unto themselves, each reality presenting its own problems, logic, and paradox.

And yet, for all these differences, when the authors represented in this anthology gathered at the first symposium of Tibetan women writers held at the University of Virginia in April 2022,¹ the writers celebrated their common aspirations, struggles, and hopes, and affirmed a commitment to bringing forth the voices of Tibetans from all walks of life, especially those who too often pass unheard. Moreover, it became clear that writing itself is a site of struggle and insight, but also of healing and friendship, particularly for writers who have endured displacement, patriarchies, and dispossession. As new friendships were forged and old ones renewed, the Symposium soon became known

^{1 &}quot;লংশংক্র্ ঝুশাসাংকুলাইলাইলা ইন্মাইল্ ইন্মাইল্ ইন্মাইল্ মাইল্ মাইলা (The Tibetan Women Writing Symposium: A Celebration of Tibetan Women's Literature)." April 8-10, 2022. University of Virginia.

^{2 &}quot;The Second Lotsawa Translation Workshop: Celebrating Buddhist Women's Voices in the Tibetan Tradition." October 13-16, 2022. Northwestern University.

^{3 &}quot;Charting the Uncharted World of Tibetan Women Writers Today. An Ongoing Conversation." January 5-7, 2023. Institut national des langues et civilisations orientales (Paris).

⁵ Especially noteworthy is a 53-volume curated collection of writings by and/or about Buddhist women throughout history published by the khenmos at Larung Gar Five Sciences Buddhist Academy. These women are held up as exemplars for contemporary Buddhist practitioners. See Bla rung arya tāre'i dpe tshogs phyogs rtsom sgrig khang, editor, মান্তবেত্তী কেন্দ্র ক্রেক্তির ক্রমেন্তর ক্রিক্তির ক্রমেন্তর ক্রমেন starting to pay greater attention to their own biases in their selections of subjects, and studies of important women throughout Tibetan literary history have increased within the Tibetophone and Anglophone academies. We hope this anthology of pieces selected by the authors at the Celebration is a welcome addition to this burgeoning movement.

Readers can find brief introductions to each piece in Janet Gyatso's thoughtful preface and bios of each author below each piece and translation, including links to purchase their works when possible. Each piece is briefly introduced by its translator, wherein the translator calls attention to especially challenging or interesting dimensions of the piece that might have otherwise escaped the reader's attention, particularly when reading in a different language than the original. These introductions were provided only in English so that the translators could devote their resources to providing bilingual editions of each literary work. The original text is provided atop its translation. We have dispensed with Wylie in favor of Tibetan text where possible—a benefit of Yeshe's digital format—and have deliberately left Tibetan phonetics unstandardized, as many of the authors already have their own preferred phonetic renderings. Moreover, the works gathered here depict Tibetans from a variety of linguistic backgrounds, and so we have left phonetic choices up to each translator, as the same word might be pronounced quite differently across the Plateau.

in and on Tibetan Buddhist Nuns' Terms," Religions, vol. 11, no. 10, 2020, pp. 543-562, and Jacoby, Sarah, and Padma'tsho, "Lessons from Buddhist Foremothers: The Editors of the Ārya Tāre Book Series," Voices from Larung Gar, edited by Holly Gayley. Boulder, Colorado, Snow Lion, 2021, pp. 219-233. The collection also includes an eight-volume series of scholastic commentaries (ব্র্রীক্ষর) penned by Khenmo Yonten, which are possibly the first commentaries published by a woman in Tibetan history. For more on Khenmo Yonten, see Liang, Jue, and Andrew S. Taylor, "Tilling the Fields of Merit: The Institutionalization of Feminine Enlightenment in Tibet's First Khenmo Program," Journal of Buddhist Ethics, vol. 27, 2020, pp. 231-262, at 252-253. Chelsea Hall also presented on Khenmo Yonten and her commentaries in a paper, "Khenmo Yönten's Quiet Commentaries: Publishing Female-Authored Buddhist Texts at Serta Larung Gar," at the 2017 American Academy of Religion conference on the panel "Voices from Larung Gar."

A few different motivations inspired the choice to make this edition bilingual: First, there is no such thing as an objective or perfect translation, and we hope that this volume will call attention to the process of translation too often left unacknowledged in hermeneutic encounters. Second, we hope to support the physical presence of the Tibetan language as it has been often absent in Euro-American Tibetan Studies publications, as previous translation efforts have been mostly unidirectional from Tibetan into European languages. Third, we hope that a bilingual edition will broaden the audience of each of the writers anthologized here. Those writing in Tibetan or Chinese have rarely received an Anglophone audience, while those writing in English may have received only a limited Tibetophone audience despite actively theorizing and engaging Tibetan themes and imagery in their works. Finally, the readership of Yeshe is cosmopolitan and multilingual, with varying levels of proficiency in the languages contained in this volume. We hope that readers will not simply accept our translations at face value, but actively reflect on the translators' choices: What is gained and lost in each translation?

Although we hope that the materials here read smoothly, or at least are challenging in deliberate ways, a number of obstacles had to be overcome for the Celebration and this volume to manifest, and we wish to thank some of our supporters: The Symposium was initially organized by Jue Liang and Tashi Dekyid Monet, and could not have gotten off the ground without the help of Lama Jabb and Janet Gyatso, who should be credited with its original inspiration and were indispensable in the initial planning and grant-writing. As a global pandemic delayed the Symposium for months and then years, Andrew

Taylor and Erin Burke joined the organizing team. As the on-site organizers, Erin and Tashi shouldered the lion's share of the work, shepherding the Symposium to its celebratory conclusion. We also must thank Dhondup Tashi Rekjong, who, on top of contributing his own translations and knowledge of Tibetan literature as a participant, tirelessly served as interpreter throughout the symposium. The process of securing funds and visas for the writers from Asia to travel during this period of restrictions and isolation was unimaginably complicated, and we wish to thank David Germano, Ariana Maki, Rongwo Lugyal, Eben Yonnetti, and the Tibetan community in Charlottesville for all their help. We are also most grateful to Shelly Bhoil, Patricia Schiaffini-Vedani, and the entire Yeshe editorial team for enthusiastically offering their prestigious journal as a venue for these authors' writings. Their guidance has been invaluable.

We would like to encourage readers to support and reciprocate the gifts of creativity and insight that these writers have shared with us. For example, if one of the pieces in this collection speaks to you, please consider buying the author's book or inviting them to speak at your institution. We hope that Lungta or the vitality of Tibetan voices, languages, Land, and imaginations will flourish interdependently with the land and life of the places where we live.

Introduction
Women's Literature: Vistas of Modern Tibetan Trauma

Janet Gyatso

Abstract: The introduction surveys the contributions to the anthology from a literary perspective. It asks questions about the relationship between narrator and characters, as well as the role of trauma, sorrow, longing, and wit in each case.

Keywords: homeland, nostalgia, trauma, Tibetan women writers

We have before us something rare and valuable. The reader will find in this short issue a rich display of the diversity—and array of brilliances—in Tibetan women's writings today. Some of the authors are writing from inside Tibet, some from the exile community in India, and some are abroad in the West. They write in Tibetan, English, and Chinese. An integral part of the growing modern literary scene among Tibetans world-wide, women writers have unfortunately received little attention. Hence the impulse for this issue, and the symposium at University of Virginia in April 2022 that occasioned it.

How shall we read these varied works? As examples that represent modern Tibetan literature? As sites for feminist analysis of women's distinctive ways of writing? As pieces of literature to enjoy? Of course, these approaches need not be mutually exclusive. But among the choices for focus, I prefer to read them first and foremost as literature. We can give ourselves license to zero in on the achievement of the writer in her attempt to use her medium as art. That also means we can feel free to appreciate how that art speaks to us, the readers, who need not be limited to the author's intended audience but still can find resonance across cultural and geographical distances. We readers of literature are looking for insights and ways of being to appreciate and live our lives better. I recommend this approach not only out of hedonism or possibly even self-indulgence. I also think it is our responsibility, as readers and translators of Tibetan literature, to give these writings their due as art, and not merely as yielding information on Tibetaness, or woman's predicament, or some other construct of identity. To focus only on the latter would be to confine Tibetan literature, perhaps even to prevent it from really being literature after all. We owe it to these stories to read them for their creative efforts, for their contribution to being human (and/or animal).

19

Of course, that is not to say to ignore the particularities of context—of the author's background, social circumstances, literary influence, linguistic constraints and possibilities. The more we know of such things, the more we appreciate the accomplishment of each piece. And so even when we note their evident efforts to address the modern Tibetan predicament, we should not miss what makes these stories and essays literature and not mere documentary resources: we can appreciate how their skillful use of language and timing and nuance and intimation and irony enhances the punch of their story and its reception in the reader's heart and mind.

The short space of this introduction allows only a few scratches on the surface of what I just suggested. Given my past interest in autobiography in premodern Tibet, my own attention is drawn to the emerging forms of self-figuration we find in these works. By that I mean the way that the author configures her characters and narrators—especially those that stand in for herself—in relation to the pressures of culture and society and politics and economics and colonialism all around her. And that is not to mention the deep emotional currents palpable in every piece.

On first encountering this collection I found it interesting to realize that Tsedrön Kyi's "Silent Dusk" is the only one not written in the first person (even Tsering Wangmo Dhompa's complex narrator uses the first person, among others, to refer to herself). I would add that Tsedrön Kyi's characters are also the purest and simplest in the collection, if perhaps the hardest to take in. The story offers no redeeming hope, just a totalizing predicament of a female protagonist who seems totally subject to the whims of two husbands, each unsatisfying in different ways. The heroine is immersed in a static double-bind, oppressed by her inability to please either of her men, one because he is unrelentingly drunk, jealous, and demanding, the other because of his education that the heroine can never share. Strikingly, she cannot even take refuge in the vast landscape of her homeland, a sight that many others might find inspiring. But no, even here "(i)n the sky, the moon had no brightness, and even the constellations did not shine." Can we presume that the author is at least offering her readers the consolation of the art of expression itself? We can only wonder if she is identifying with her character Metok Lhadzé. Or is she using her art of desolation to help herself—and the rest of us—to distance ourselves from her?

Like "Silent Dusk," Min Nangze's "Mother's Tsampa"

presents us with a mostly univocal, simple calculus. Recounted in the first person, "Mother's Tsampa" foregrounds absence, nostalgia and irreconcilable loss, an irreplaceable preciousness that was once in her hands. Interestingly, however, the first person perspective here manages to transcend itself. As already prefigured in the long tradition around eating this quintessential Tibetan food that her mother used to tell her family, the narrator appeals to the communitarian loyalties of her readers by proclaiming that all Tibetans raised in tents have had the same experience that she is reminiscing about here. Similarly, and despite singling herself out as the one who most appreciated her mom's tsampa in her entire family, the narrator realizes, in a dream of reuniting with her mother in that primal scene of feeding, that she cannot keep it all for her individual self. The image of her entire family holding out their hands to receive some of the treasured staple breaks open both the dream and the story itself.

In both "Silent Dusk" and "Mother's Tsampa" we see literature providing a place to register a complaint, about loss and lack of fulfillment, even though at least one of the stories seems to suggest a change of perspective that might somehow offer some deliverance from pained longing. Pema Lhadze 's "Love Is a Pair of Unloosed Arrows" seems also to be about longing although the reader has to work harder to discern it. We are less clear about the narrator's positionality than we are about any of the other voices in this collection, but she is clearly fascinated with the lifestyle of two religious adepts who are also lovers. Apparently, they abandoned their homes in eastern Tibet to run away together and are now managing a nunnery at the famous Tibetan mountain retreat at Chimphu. The narrator/author ends up visiting them twice over the course of some years. But despite her own account of herself as an obtrusive and nosy interviewer, she never really seems to get the full story of how and why the couple is living as they do, including the boldly inquisitive question around whether they are happy. The reader is left wondering as well. This is not an omniscient narrator, but as Liang and Taylor point out, she seems to read the minds of the couple, at least for their sorrows. What we do know by the end of the story is that her own heart is aching, as she bemoans her empty life.

Similar to Min Nangdze's "Mother's Tsampa," Nyima Tso's "My Father's Skills" is filled with nostalgic longing for the world of the past, idealizing her father's meticulous and ethical work as a tailor back in Tibet. However, various oppositional juxtapositions in her narrative carve out some space for movement, reflection, and perhaps deliverance. These include the discrepancy between being in exile versus being in her homeland, and the miserable miniature sewing machine she obtained in exile versus the beautiful device that was so productive in the hands of her father. Most of all, the distinction that the author keeps driving home between the character that she was in the past and the self-critical narrator she is now—both of them are "her," and yet they are at odds—achieves what some autobiography theorists have called a "duplex" self. For the narrator of Nyima Tso's story, her moral failures as a child may be uncomfortable and troubling, but it actually gives her adult self the space for critical distance and reevaluation. It allows her some redress of her former ungrateful self and perhaps even to recuperate a happier childhood than she had thought she was having in the past. The process returns her to the Tibetan identity she had scoffed off as a child, but any idealized nostalgia is chastened, replaced by a recognition that self-fulfillment is hard-won—and yet still achievable.

Chimé's tour de force piece, "Tales of Myself and Snow," transports herself—and her reader along with her—to a place of selfinvention and transformation, through her astonishing powers of poetic vision. Grounded in the prosaic, if enchanting, event of a snowfall, the beauty of the moment serves to initiate a series of juxtapositions regarding the poet's homeland and corresponding images of paradise, female deities, and most of all the protectress whom she so earnestly seeks to encounter. This union is never entirely consummated. But we still witness an elevation of the poet. This comes not only via a virtual yogic breakthrough that partakes liberally of Buddhist meditative techniques, but perhaps even more so through the power of writing itself. This power is bestowed by none other than the very queen of poetry Sarasvatī with whom the poet seeks to unite. We begin to suspect that her verses have already effected the divine union that the poet seeks. This is so even if her "passionate expression" has only "barely evaded shamelessness." Indeed, such shamelessness (if it is that) is something for which the reader can only be grateful.

Tsering Wangmo Dhompa's free verse essay "Somewhere Else" offers a deeply complex portrait of Tibetan life in exile, with all of its attendant memory, mistrust, and unfulfilled desire. We don't quite know who is the "her," or "she," with whom the essay begins, although we suspect it is the narrator's mother. And yet, evocative of the transgenerational trauma that the refugee community shares, the pronouns of this essay are unreliable, with the narrator shifting from first to second person, and perhaps even to third, ever seeking the best container to hold her conflicting experiences. Even the Tibetan Buddhist teachings to which the narrator often turns don't provide unambiguous hope, but rather serve as warnings: warnings about the proper vessel (or "pot") with whom to share one's story; injunctions both to remember words in proper sequence and to look beyond them; and allusions to karma, the deeds that we don't remember, but which are like a "...seed no bigger than a sesame grain [that] grows into a tree." The question of whether it is actually one's own unremembered past actions which caused the bad fortune of exile must plague every refugee; it certainly did plague the entire Tibetan population when they lost their independence and their homeland, the land "at whose center a demoness was pinned to the ground." Tsering Dhompa draws in her reader into this somber state of reflection, the reader who feels directly addressed even if she does not have access to any of the pronouns that the essayist embodies, and even if she might be the arbiter of who gets to escape refugee status and become human.

Painfully moving in different ways is the short but astonishingly candid reflections from the erudite Kelsang Lhamo, excerpted from her 1999 book Dreaming at the Sage's Abode: Biographical Sketches of Four Living Tibetan Nuns. The author shares with her reader a gorgeous love poem actually written by a man, Gonpo, as an offering to her, and with whom she apparently had a deeply affective relationship. The relationship was never consummated, for reasons we are given to understand had to do with the fact that Kelsang Lhamo was a celibate nun at the time of the events depicted. Her description of Gonpo remains deeply observant and attuned to his depth of character, a depth that is amply exhibited in his letter to the author. His respectful discernment of her commitment to her vows is palpable and sensitive, just as is his cautious portrayal of her as a delicate deer. And yet he also detects the "warm vital blood" flowing beneath her demure demeanor.

Among other things, Kelsang Lhamo reveals with this exceptional self-portrait the deep human complexities of the emotional life of the renunciate, perhaps even more so when that devoted renunciate is a woman.

Finally, we have the pleasure of "The Lottery," another sublimely crafted autobiographical essay. Tenzin Dickie seamlessly situates herself within Tibetan exile culture, even while using the affordances of literature to stray far beyond that. She and her community are keenly alert to the different values of white Europeandescent foreigners, or "Injis, ... a proud and narrow-minded people, we thought, who would take kindness for contempt." But she spends most of "The Lottery" peering into the depths of her own childhood self. She freely exposes not only her shame as a childhood bed-wetter but also her own self-absorption ("They assumed I was miserable about my parents' leaving for abroad. I was only thinking, how do I stop peeing in bed?"), thus boldly departing from expectations around Tibetan filial piety. Tenzin Dickie even questions the nature of autobiographical memory altogether, arriving at what we could label a "triplex" perspective on the self, one that knows not only the difference between the narrating self and the narrated one, but also the necessary distortions of narration altogether. Even as she tells her story as a child in exile with exuberance and wit, the reader gets the impression that she is not above questioning the entire project of focusing on herself to begin with, an anxiety far from unknown in world literature, not to mention the enormous reservoir of premodern Tibetan writing that all of our authors here are heiresses to, consciously or not.

I appreciate that the editors of this issue decided to provide the first-language version of all of the stories, along with a translation into either English or Tibetan when these were not the original. This meant rendering the two Anglophone contributions, "The Lottery" and "Somewhere Else," in Tibetan, a venture as challenging, if not more so, as is translating modern Tibetan or Chinese into English. We readers owe all of the translators much gratitude for wading into the very choppy waters of cultural contact, where terms, values, assumptions, implications, and intertextual echoes are set loose, at best finding uneasy landing spots in the target language that unavoidably make for new associations of their own. Our own literary imaginations have been set loose as well, but in the expert hands of these fine authors, translators, and editors we can feel free to take in the new vistas.

ร:र्राप्त प्रति प्राप्त अपूर्ण (Tales of Myself and Snow) पक्षे सेर् Chimé

(Translated from Tibetan by Tashi Dekyid Monet and David Germano)

Abstract: In this essay, we offer a translation of the famed Tibetan contemporary poet Chimé's poem, "Tales of Myself and Snow," written in 2012 in twenty stanzas of traditional metric verses. The essay introduces the poem with biographical notes on the author as well as our interpretation of the poem's key themes based upon extensive interviews with the author. We read the poem as deeply embedded in the author's relationship with her Tibetan homeland and Palden Lhamo—a principal female protective deity of Tibet and the Tibetan people. These stanzas trace a pilgrimage across the landscape of Tibet and its seasons of life and death, as well as across the landscape of her own body and mind, with poetic creation acting as the beating heart of the pilgrim driving her forward to this goddess whose usual dark body is reimagined as white as snow.

Keywords: Chimé, winter, Palden Lhamo, spiritual protectors, Tibetan language, Buddhism

Translators' Introduction

Chimé (এই মান্) is the pen name for Pematso (মহ্ল এই j), a famed contemporary poet and Tibetan language teacher from Rebgong, Amdo. She is among the first Tibetan women writers educated in the secular schools in Tibet and is one of the most well-known Tibetan poets living today. She graduated from Qinghai Nationalities Institute in 1987 and taught in Rebgong for over three decades. Chimé has composed many important essays in addition to her powerful books of poetry. "Tales of Myself and Snow" (১:১১:বির্নার্কার্কুন্) is a poem from Chimé's first collection of poems, Dreams of the Moon (ক্লুন্মন), published in 2012 in Ziling (Xining). She published a second book of collected poems, The Youth of Water (কুই'আ্ড;১ইছা) in 2016, while one of her most famous poems, "The Ring" (জাইনো) was separately published in 2017 and subsequently translated into English and powerfully interpreted by Dr. Lama Jabb. A third book of poetry and essays was published in 2023, The World in a Copper Mirror (35%) ग्री से निरंतर में पहेंचा हेता), which concludes with her autobiographical reflections and thoughts on the creative process (the latter was also separately published in a bilingual edition in 2023 with English translation by Rongwo Lugyal with the same title). Her poems have been awarded the highest recognitions for Tibetan literature in China, including the 2015 Wild Yak Prize for Literature and the 2017 Annual Award for Nationalities Literature from the China Writers' Association.

Chimé's life has been marked by intense suffering and loss, which have left indelible marks on her poetry. She grew up in the violent chaos of the Cultural Revolution, during which her mother and family were especially brutalized as a result of their previously privileged social status. Her father was unfairly imprisoned and died as a result when she was just six. Chimé's mother was forced to give her away when she was nine, such that she was raised as a foster child by an older couple. Her mother later passed away when she was seventeen. In Chimé's adult life she has suffered as a female writer at the hands and words of a misogynist Tibetan world, including over a decade of enforced silence as an author that she alludes to in her autobiography. There have also been private sufferings at the scale of her childhood, but which are not ours to share. This is the personal context for the dark vein of suffering, loss, betrayal, and grief which runs like black quicksilver through her writing. That said, "Tales of Myself and Snow" is actually one of the more joyful of her major poems with its lovely descriptions of a vibrant natural landscape interwoven with the pervasive figure of birds embodying the compelling power of poetic creation. Despite this, her personal grief is still evident, such as in the poem's second stanza characterizing the poem overall as words of her own sorrow, which in the next-to-last stanza transmutes into the yearnings of Tibetan souls across the plateau against the background of "these chaotic times" when "the darkness of opaque paths conceal the land which holds us." It also manifests in her reference to the rarity of "friendship without deceit," and her twice entertaining her own death or living death in evocative and violent images, "this desiccated cairn, a barely standing thing, a body separated from mind," and "the terror of the body's flesh and skin being rent asunder."

Chimé's poems are also deeply spiritual in character but engage enduring Buddhist themes in compelling ways that are uniquely personal rather than simple evocations of Buddhist terminology and themes as articulated in the classical literature. Thus, her evocation of suffering and grief in "Tales of Myself and Snow" echoes the first noble truth of suffering, a primordial concern to which Buddhist meditations endlessly return. This pattern is also exemplified in the entire poem being cast as a prayer and supplication to the Tibetan goddess and protectress Palden Lhamo (५६०० द्वार द्वार

Pelden Lhamo, never explicitly named in the poem but rather addressed primarily by Chimé simply as protectress (राप्ता), is one of the most important female divinities in Tibet, as well as its most famous spiritual guardians, regardless of gender. She was, and is, also closely associated with the Tibetan people and their protection as a people. Her typical iconographic representation is a dark blue figure with fierce appearance, including a crown of five skulls and often holding a skull cup full of blood. While the title represents a category of tantric female divinities who can take many visual forms, including at times being white or red in color, the overwhelming majority of depictions are fierce in demeanor and dark blue in bodily color. Indeed, Chimé's earliest relationship with Palden Lhamo emerged in the context of nightmares she had as a teenager, in which she was chased by a fierce dark nomadic woman, who whistled and tried to paint her black with charcoal but never caught her. A tantric teacher told her that the nightmares were indicative that Palden Lhamo was seeking a relationship with her, and after Chimé began offering juniper incense and chanting to the goddess, as well as later performing visualizations and meditations centered on her, the nightmares ceased and gave way to a life-long relationship and inspiration.

Of particular importance in the present context is that Palden Lhamo is often considered to be a fierce emanation of the goddess Sarasvatī (ব্যুদ্রশান্তর আ ব্যুদ্রমান্তর শ্লুমান্ত্র), the goddess of knowledge, music, and poetry with a deep and enduring relationship to speech and artistic inspiration, as well as secondary associations with healing and protection. In Tibet, she is also identified as "Melodious Savioress" (Tibetan ব্রুহ্মান্তর শ্রুমানা), Sanskrit tārā sarasvatī), identified in some enumerations as one of the twenty-one forms of Tārā, the most important of all female divinities in Tibetan Buddhism and also a goddess closely connected to the protection and sustenance of the Tibetan people and Land. Chimé in fact understands her own poetic vocation, as well as her life-long relationship with Palden Lhamo, to be fundamentally linked to a ritual initiation to Sarasvatī which she received as a college student many years ago from a famous Buddhist lama, who oddly summoned her to the initiation without explanation (only later did Chimé come to recognize the relationship of Sarasvatī and Palden Lhamo). The relationship between Sarasvatī, Palden Lhamo, and her own art has thus been a topic of deep reflection for her entire adult life. These reflections, and poetic meditations, have also been interwoven with a life-long concern for the agency and rights of Tibetan women, coming to terms with her own grief at unimaginable losses, and her deep love of the Tibetan language, people, and Land.

This is the backdrop for the poem's evocation of the protectress, who Chimé reimagines as a goddess of snow, hence as white in color as the blizzards of snow descending upon the Tibetan Land as she sleeps. She also evokes the goddess as present in white bones, imaging the bones of a frozen winter landscape animated by her divine spirit. Overall, the poem explores Tibet as a people and a Land, with the Protectress intimately intertwined with a Land that she both blesses and of which she herself is an expression. We discern in it a recasting of the primordial Tibetan story of the Tibetan plateau as a fierce female demoness who must be violently tamed by temples and the constant reiteration of Buddhist esoteric rituals of subjugation. Here the Tibetan landscape, blanketed by snow in the dead of winter, merges with Palden Lhamo, such that her typical dark blue body is now the uncharacteristic whiteness of Tibetan snow, also imaged as the whiteness of bone and conch shells. Thus in the poet's repeated beseeching of Palden Lhamo, the protectress, we would suggest she is also implicitly evoking the Tibetan Land as divine, thereby undoing the original subjugation of a female gendered Tibetanness, as well as the Buddhist fissuring of Land as the subjugated subject of Buddhist ritual mastery. Instead, the female, and Land, are the divine, who she implores for a vision, for a relationship, and for acknowledgement throughout the poetic meditation. The whiteness may also evoke Palden Lhamo's inner core as the goddess of poetry, Sarasvatī, who is typically painted and visualized as white, and who is here clearly present as Chimé explores the intimate connections of Palden Lhamo to the act of poetic creation and inspiration.

While the opening two stanzas portray the immediate context of the poem in a snowstorm in the dead of winter, it isn't until the fourteenth stanza that winter reemerges in the specter of Palden Lhamo's white bones. In between, the Land of Tibet is evoked in lovely and joyful terms outside of winter (stanzas three, four, seven, nine, ten, and eleven). Once winter returns with those white bones, it is next described as a delightful emissary of Palden Lhamo (stanza fifteen), but then immediately is imaged as the conch-white protectress contrasted to a reference to the poet's own violent death (stanza sixteen), after which it concludes in stanzas eighteen and nineteen with a silent, possibly ominous dark winter landscape at nighttime with "massive mountains in natural alignment, draped by snow" and "souls roaming across the four regions of Tibet." This poem thus begins with the death of winter, returns to vibrant life, and concludes with a fervent prayer across a still winter landscape. Across this changing landscape of Tibet, two threads weave a tapestry of reflection—the nature of poetic creation and the intense hope for a vision of Palden Lhamo. The first two stanzas self-consciously refer to the process of writing as "tales of myself and snow" described as "words of my own sorrow" that she offers as "sustenance for the winds so intimate with snow." The fifth stanza imagines poetic creation as the supreme goddess unraveling her natural freedom from within her body, which becomes "designs falling to the surface of a mirror" (stanza six) and melodies stemming from "the exquisitely blissful vast matrix of body and speech" (stanza eight). She brings forth two exemplars of Tibetan female poets from ancient times, each vividly evoked with colored landscapes of turquoise and red copper respectively, who this time constitute "tightly woven knots of composition in naturally free speech" (stanza nine). She then images the poets as "a feathered flock" flying through a forested landscape with song and dance (stanza eleven), before returning to the image of poetry as sketches upon the mind's crystal mirror (stanza twelve) that constitute her gift, though people understand her inspired words in a hundred ways due to divergent karma (stanza thirteen). She then in the final verse (twenty) vividly describes speech blossoming into the mind's seeds via letters at her fingertips, asking Palden Lhamo to witness the moment.

Palden Lhamo herself appears first implicitly in the images of snow falling in the first two verses but then is explicitly evoked in verses four and five as the protectress of all life and the inspiring muse behind Chimé's own poetic capacities. Verse eight addresses the goddess directly, linking her to the stirring of melodies within the poet, and in a dramatic image asks her for inspiration, even if the poet is just "this desiccated cairn, a barely standing thing, a body separated from mind?" (stanza ten). The protectress is then addressed in every stanza from the twelfth to the final, twentieth stanza in an intensifying crescendo, as the poet asks her to acknowledge her own poetic acts (twelve), inquires as to when a personal vision will be forthcoming (thirteen), requests a presence in the naked white bones of winter beyond all guile and betrayal (fourteen), asks how snowfall could be anything but emissaries of the protectress's impending arrival (fifteen), claims that even death would be nothing in the face of such an embrace (sixteen), requests her to come this moment in a blaze of flames (seventeen), plaintively asks if she thinks of we Tibetans as the winter landscape sleeps in the dead of night (eighteen), supplicates for a collective encounter for all Tibetans (nineteen), and then concludes by asking her to witness with joy the poet's own poetic acts of transmutation.

As we read the poem, we began to think of it as a contemporary version of a Buddhist scripture, a sūtra or a tantra which always begin with a narrative frame (ক্লান্স্বাৰ্) that lays out the sublime teacher, retinue, teaching, place, and time framing the ensuing dialog in which an interlocutor asks a Buddha questions, and the Buddha responds. Just so, the poet begins by detailing a place (Rebgong in Tibet) and a time (the dead of winter), while the teacher is Palden Lhamo and the retinue is the same as the interlocutor, namely Chimé herself, who poses six questions and requests to Palden Lhamo. In a distinctively modern inversion, however, her questions are unanswered, left lingering on the page, chasms of uncertainty compared to the confident, lengthy sermons that usually ensue in Buddhist scriptures when questions are posed. The teaching itself is explicitly about the interweaving of Land and person, betrayal and suffering, the hope for redemption, and the process of poetic inspiration and creation. Indeed, Palden Lhamo clearly functions in part as a poetic muse for Chimé, inspiring her poetry and acting as a religious subject of veneration. The English word muse ultimately derives from the Greek word mousa, which literally means song or poetry, as well as nine sister goddesses of knowledge and the arts. Such connection of divinity to inspiration for composition is a long standing one in Tibetan Buddhism, as visions of Buddhas, Bodhisattvas, and Goddesses might inspire a composition or revelation, while in the Tibetan revelatory treasure (স্ট্রিম্মা) tradition, historically concealed and later revealed scriptures were mediated by various male and especially female guardian spirits tasked with protecting and then facilitating recovery of the texts in question. The preponderance of such texts was in fact in verse, such that divinely-inspired Buddhist poetry has a long history in Tibet. Indeed, the treasure tradition is pervaded by accounts of the deeply symbolic and mysterious processes of revelation, which can be interpreted in terms of accounts of a poetic process of inspiration and creation.

The poem's fifth stanza on unraveling knots of blockage in the body resulting in spontaneous songs of creativity and freedom are a long-standing theme in terms of subtle body meditations unleashing spontaneous compositions of esoteric songs. The ninth stanza then beautifully inverts this by imaging poetic compositions by historical Tibetan women as "tightly woven knots of composition in naturally free speech," suggesting the specificity of their experience constitute intricately woven knots of value in their poetic expressions, not obstacles to be dissolved. The poem then concludes with a lovely image of mind running like a dark ink through letters, speech, fingers, and pen to become a poem, transforming her grief into a redeeming vision of the protectress, and of the very soul of Tibet and Tibetans. These twenty stanzas then, are a pilgrimage across the landscape of Tibet and its seasons of life and death, and the landscape of her own body and mind, with the act of poetic creation constituting the beating heart of the pilgrim driving her forward to this goddess with a body white as snow. Unlike a Buddhist scripture, the questions and pleas to the Buddhist divinity are never answered, and the poem concludes with two requests posed to Palden Lhamo, asking that she rejoice and witness the Tibetan poetic process that flows through Chimé in the very act of poetically invoking the protectress. Yet, in a sense, Palden Lhamo has been talking throughout the poem, manifesting in the medium of the Tibetan Land's vibrant agency present stanza after stanza, as well as internally as the dynamic force that stirs within the poet to give rise to the poem itself.

र.र्टाव.चंद्र.चोध्य.क्रिरी

- 1. अं र्न्निन् ने न स्थे अ अं न्युर्ग्न नित्र नित्य नित्र नित्य नित्र न
- 2. झ्नाःभ्रुनः तसुरः नित्रे त्यानाः स्वेतः स्वेतः स्वित्रान्यः स्वात्रः स्
- 3. निवसःनिषदःकनिषःग्रीःसेनःर्निदःनिषेत्रःश्चिद्या । र्निषःदुरःश्चिनानीःग्वत्यःसळ्दःनश्चेद्यःसदेःखुत्य । निवसःश्चर्यानीःग्वत्यःसळ्दःनश्चेद्यःसदेःखुत्य । नुषःदुःश्चेनानीःग्वत्यःस्तर्भेदःस्यःश्चिन ।
- 4. र्बून्देरुखःयाणपरःवीदेश्वानया। नडुन्द्रुशुःकुःयानपर्वार्वेशन्देशःनुनानस्वा। ननयःस्रहेशःस्वानीशःक्षेत्रःनतुन्वेनायेनःनह्नुस्य।।

थेन् सर्ळे म्ह्रीन ता र्श्हेर्य सदा क्षेत्र स्था प्रश्नी

- 5. शेसशः ब्रॅट: प्रीटशः दशः वर्श्वेषशः प्रवेः ख्रः श्रें श्रें श्रें कि । लुशः र्हेपः प्रयाशे वो प्रमान स्त्रीयः प्राप्ता । लुशः र्हेपः प्रयाशे वो प्रमान स्त्रीयः प्राप्ता । शेसशः सर्वेषा वी स्तर्भा होते स्त्रीयः प्रयाशे ।
- 7. रे.चारअर्नगरः ग्री-डॅर्न्यवर्ष्यर्थः स्वर्था। श्वरः मध्यः अर्देवा वी अः वावि वात्वर्तुः वित्रेतः। श्वरः स्वतः त्राव्यायः स्वर्धः स्वतः ग्रीकः स्वतः।। र्वेषः स्वतः त्राव्यायः स्वर्धः स्वरः स्वी ।
- 8. द्वः यहेना हेत् श्रीः नद्ना सं में सळ म् या । धीदः श्रूदः श्रीदः श्रीः विस्तरा त्या हस्य में त्या प्रदेश । न्यत्य स्था स्वा नी श्रीं म्हण्य स्था नदे केत् त्या । नद्रस्य स्था से स्था हिंसा हैना नद्ना त्या नहे या ।
- ७.क्रॅ.चीली.अष्ट्र.लु.ट्र्याश्व.श्वे.श्वट.श.चीटी ।

स्वीस्टार्च्याकाः क्ष्यायन्त्रम् । विन्यायाः क्ष्यायन्त्रम् । विन्यायाः क्ष्यायन्त्रम् । विन्यायाः क्ष्यायम् । विन्यायाः क्ष्यायम् । विन्यायाः क्ष्यायम् । विन्यायाः क्ष्यायम् । विन्यायाः विन्यायः विष्यायः विष्

- 10. र्वेट्टिंग्नेशेनाद्यायिक्षायिः ह्यानेशाया । र्वेट्टिंन्टिंट्टिंग्याद्यार्थेयान्ये नट्नार्थे व्यवस्था । सुयायेय्याद्यात्रीयेयार्थे याद्यीयार्थ्या । र्वेट्याय्यायेयात्रीयार्थे याद्यायाय्यायाः स्थाप
- चारः क्षेट्र क्षं क्षं व्याचित्र क्षेत्र क्षं क्षं व्याच्या क्याच्या क्षं व्याच्या व
- 12. दे:श्चेतः सेदःशुःश्वदः त्रह्रुदः सर्देदः त्राव्ययः त्रदे। । धेदः दृद्दस्य श्वेयः श्चेः सेर्येदः देदः त्रावृहेत्रः त्या । द्याः देवाः श्चेदःशुः देशेदः श्चेत्रः त्याः स्वयाः स्वयाः स्वयाः स्वयाः स्वयाः स्वयाः स्वयाः स्वयाः स्वयाः स्वय
- 13. स्ट्रास्त्रीयः श्रीत्रास्त्रीयः स्ट्रास्त्रः स्ट्रास्त्रः स्ट्रास्त्रः स्ट्रास्त्रः स्ट्रास्त्रः स्ट्रास्त त्रमः त्राप्त्रः स्ट्रास्त्रः स्ट्रा

- 14. र्श्विम् स्त्रुः सेन् श्रीः ननेत्रः सः सर्वेदः नगवः न। । तुसः नः स्वदः नः नुदः वर्षे व्यानवित्रः वित्रः वित्राम् । । गोटः नुसः नगमः श्रीसः वर्षोटः नवेः नन्नाः सः व्यास। । यात्रसः श्रीं नासः स्वासः स्वासः व्याप्यः नमः व्या
- 16. धिन् स्रायतः नृद्धीन् सः स्वसः विन् ग्यूनः त्रानः त्रह्यः नृक्षुत्यः त्यो । तुरः निन् वार्थः हिन् वार्थेनः न्यतुन् ग्यूनः त्रा । त्रुकः श्वः स्वायः वाहेशः द्वायः यदेः विहेषायः श्वरः वीया । वार्थेदः क्षेः स्युत्यः व्याद्ये वार्थेकः ग्यूनः क्षेत्र ।
- 17. नशुर्न्स्यळ्यः ग्रीः द्रम्यः श्रॅं स्थिदः व्या । भ्रुःश्रेदः नशुश्रः ग्रीः यद्द्रमा श्रें द्रम्यः श्रें श्रें व्या श्रें द्रम्यः श्रें व्या श्रें
- 18. ज्ञायास्य नश्चेत्रास्य स्त्रेत् श्रुत्र सिंग्नास्स्य ग्रीस्य नार्धेत्रास्य । देःस्र सेना स्त्रे : ह्वा स्त्रास्य स्त्रीहरू स्त्रास्य ।

त्याः भ्रीः योश्वाः न्यत्रे स्थाः व्यक्तिः स्थाः न्याः न्याः । व्यक्षः स्थाः स्थाः न्याः स्थाः व्यक्तिः स्थाः स्थाः ।

- 19. मान्यान्त्रान्तिः न्त्रीः न्त्रिः न्त्रीयः न्त्रीयः न्त्रीः न्त्रीः न्त्रीः न्त्रीयः न्त्रीः न्त्रीयः न्त्रीः न्त्रीयः न्त्य
- 20. धेन् त्रश्चेन्यसान् त्रिंस्य स्वीत्त्राची न्यय। । र्सेन् श्चुवा हे त्र्या चल्न स्वीत्रे श्चिया वात्त्रा स्वीत्रा स्वीत्र स्वीत्र

Tales of Myself and Snow

- 1. Mid-summer flowers with swaying anthers, colors and shapes of lovely times no longer visible, enveloped by deep winter's freezing winds and blizzards, I write these tales of myself and snow.
- Waves of snowflakes undulating
 in descent before my window tonight,
 I offer words of my own sorrow rather than some ancient fable as sustenance for the winds so intimate with snow.

- 3. The golden lands of Rebkong form a sacred site where the victory banners of the saffron robes fly, a central region for the five fields of knowledge, ancient Magadha embodied, abundant even now in displays of wonder.
- 4. Sacred lines adorn mountains and rivers, the vessel, the protectress grants spiritual attainments to all life, the elixir, their glory and beauty encircle the seven continents, rippling waves of prayer flow in the ocean island of my mind.
- 5. The supreme goddess contemplated from the expanse of an empty mind, gathers in my throat as vivid warmth spreads through the body the knot blocking speech's natural freedom unravels, passing into world-imagining songs beyond the mind's ken.
- 6. Designs falling to the surface of a silver mirror, impure tales of life in the human realm, tonight my passionate expression just barely evades fears of being shameless.
- 7. Taking the crown of white snow mountains to my head, laying the ground of turquoise meadows as a seat, drinking fully the waters of crystal slate and forest streams, how happy, even if winged birds are my only companions.
- 8. Wonderful protectress of my world, from the exquisitely blissful vast matrix of body and speech where my mind enjoys the realm of all that appears, the composition of melodies endlessly falls to me.

- 9. Queen Sadmakar at the banks of the southern turquoise lake, and Saint Labkyidrön at the mountain of the red copper fortress: vivid melodies of the same flavor of mind are present, tightly woven knots of composition in naturally free speech.
- 10. My protectress, who has bestowed warmth and bliss via the heart to this soul wandering through mountain villages, what spiritual attainments will you grant to this desiccated cairn, a barely standing thing, a body separated from mind?
- 11. A winged flock flying through a forest's canopy, diverse songs modulating in seven melodies, pairs of lovely feathered wings in the sky's expanse rhythmically dancing, graceful and exquisite.
- 12. On the two surfaces of the mind's bright crystal mirror, such images shine vividly without obscuration, and I sketch designs of poetic knowing to welcome you, supreme protectress —do you understand?
- 13. Though a hundred people will hear different things given our distinct karmic trajectories, these chaotic times have bestowed to me this gift, and yet when will I meet you in person?
- 14. Still searching even now for this rarity,the truth of friendship beyond deceit,I request that you lend to me a mere sliver of it, protectress who stands in naked white bones.

- 15. White snow slipping in under my pillow in the middle of night, how delightful! How could these visits of the protectress's emissary not be preparations for a personal encounter?
- 16. Should the conch protectress slowly approach, luminously white and smiling from the sky expanse of my mind, I would be content even if torn from the realm of the living with the terror of the body's flesh and skin being rent asunder.
- 17. Exquisite glorious lady with awe inspiring Speech, sky dancing protectress of the three realms with your Body, please come this very moment, loving lady, to my heart's offering of a vast space of blazing flames.
- 18. A natural array of massive mountains draped in snow, the stainless white moon smiling in the expanse, the darkness of opaque paths concealing the land which holds us, do you think of us, protectress who never deceives?
- 19. I request glorious, unchanging, adamantine bodiesfor the souls roaming across the four regions of Tibet,I pray that our very purpose of wandering in these cool lands,be fulfilled in the fortune of meeting you in person.
- 20. The glories of speech transferring mind through letters, this drama blossoming from my fingers and the tip of a pen,

Chimé. Tales of Myself and Snow

supreme protectress, are you pleased from the depths of your Heart? supreme protectress, will you read it this one time with your Eyes?

হ্র্মের্ম্রের্ম্বর্মান্ত্রির্মান্ত্র্

শ্ব प्राप्त Kelsang Lhamo

(Translated from Tibetan by Kelsang Lhamo and Miranada Smith)

Abstract: Kelsang Lhamo's Dreaming at the Sage's Abode (1999) is one of the first modern poetry collections composed by a Tibetan nun. This essay offers a brief biography of Kelsang Lhamo, and background on her composition of the work in Northern India in the 1990s, along with a translated excerpt from the book's Chapter 2, Wanderer. The translation features a section of the author's prose-preface, and three letters in verse that are part of a longer correspondence between the novice nun Kelsang Lhamo ("Lhamo" in the story), and local poet, editor and publisher, Gonpo Tsering. This essay discusses the collaborative translation process, formal features of the verse with a focus on metrics, and figurative language such as symbolism and metaphor.

Keywords: Tibetan literature, Tibetan women's writing, poetry, poetics, translation

Translator's Introduction

Tibetan poet and author Kelsang Lhamo was born in 1973 in the town of Lhokha, south of Lhasa, where she attended primary school through high school. While growing up in Central Tibet, she received primarily Nyingma teachings from Sheldak Khen Rinpoche and Dungkar Losang Tinley on the topics of Tibetan medicine and the Five Minor Sciences. In 1989, she left for India to pursue further studies. Kelsang belongs to the cohort of the earliest female Tibetan writers in India to have escaped from Tibet in the late 1980s and early 1990s, a group which also includes Chukyé Drolma and Tsering Kyi, both of whom have published poetry collections in Tibetan.

While in India, Kelsang received novice vows from His Holiness The 14th Dalai Lama and, for a period of ten years, studied and received Lamrim (অমাইমা) and other teachings from Geshe Dupthob Rinpoche, and many other masters. She also studied Hindi language and the Vedas in Varanasi. Her first book of poetry, Dreaming at the Sage's Abode: Biographical Sketches of Four Living Tibetan Nuns was published in 1999. Kelsang moved to the USA in 1999 and for several years taught Tibetan language and culture to the son of Sogyal Rinpoche. During this time, she also translated Sogyal Rinpoche's Tibetan Book of Living and Dying into the Tibetan language with Ringu Tulku. In 2002, with the kind support of Alak Zenkar Rinpoche and Tashi Tsering, she joined the Buddhist Digital Resource Center (BDRC), formerly the Tibetan Buddhist Resource Center (TBRC). Under the guidance of Gene Smith, BDRC's founder, she continued her study of Tibetan literature. Kelsang has taught Tibetan language and literature to many students. At present she is working as Senior Librarian and Cataloger at BDRC.

I collaborated with Kelsang in translating this excerpt from the second chapter, Wanderer (ব্ৰচ্ছাৰ্মাইন্), of her poetry collection

Dreaming at the Sage's Abode: Biographical Sketches of Four Living Tibetan Nuns (1999). Kelsang composed this mixed genre work initially as a series of journal entries kept between meditation sessions as a nun in extended meditation retreat in Dharamsala, in an area of Himachal Pradesh known locally as "the Sage's Abode." After ordaining as a nun with His Holiness in India, Kelsang remained in retreat in Dharamsala for a total of nine years, approximately between 1989 and 1998, and also gathered notes for the book while in retreat approximately between 1993 and 1997.

The majority of Dreaming at the Sage's Abode is biographical, with four chapters recounting the life stories of the nuns Kelsang encounters while in residence at the Sage's Abode, such as the nun Tenzin Palmo and others. The book's second chapter, Wanderer (ব্দুম্মার্মা) is autobiographical, and describes Kelsang's early life and middle years, including her upbringing in Central Tibet, journey across the Himalayas, and life as a young nun in deep extended retreat in Dharamsala, India. The chapter features an epistolary correspondence that took place while Kelsang resided in retreat and showcases four letters exchanged between herself and local Tibetan poet, editor and language teacher Gonpo Tsering. Gonpo Tsering (better known as the poet Dhatsenpa Gonpo Tsering, and by the pen name Two-armed Gonpo [अन्तरळंत्र मः अर्गेतर में मुना नाहेशा]), also lived in Dharamsala at the time. Kelsang first became acquainted with Gonpo in 1992 when he reached out to her via letter, and they corresponded for about two years, meeting for the first time late in the winter of 1993 or at the beginning of 1994.

Gonpo was born in 1963 in Manlho Tsokdzong (ক্লাইন্স্ন্), a county in Amdo. After attending university in Amdo, Gonpo arrived in Dharamsala in approximately 1989, soon taking on a position as teacher of Tibetan language. After his job as a teacher, he worked for Amnye Machen Institute, serving as editor for the journal Young Shoots (মুহামার্ক্রা) and the newspaper Democracy (হ্মাহ্মাম্ব্রা), publications which were started in Dharamsala in the 1990's.

This excerpt includes a section of prose preface, and three letters composed in verse that were exchanged between the poets. The letters are ornate verse compositions with lofty diction and rich metaphorical language, suggesting the refined poetic style of nyan ngag (अठ ५५०) that reflects Tibetan adaptation of Sanskrit verse forms. Kelsang's verse relies on long lines of classical Tibetan verse, elevensyllable lines and the typical four-line stanzas. Gonpo's verse has shorter line lengths which reflect the influence of classical verse as well as Tibetan folk song rhythms; his first letter is in the often-used classical meter of regular seven-syllable lines in four-line stanzas, while the second letter is composed in terse six-syllable lines of four-line stanzas, suggestive of Central Tibetan folk song rhythms, zhay (১৯৯૫).

In interview, Kelsang could not precisely recall how many letters were exchanged in total with Gonpo, but likely more than 10. Kelsang expresses uncertainty regarding how the four letters fit into the larger correspondence and the development of the relationship; difficulty dating the letters with precision adds ambiguity to interpretation for readers. The first letter was composed shortly after their first in-person meeting, and Kelsang explains she selected these letters for inclusion because they express the pair's mutual curiosity while getting acquainted.

Throughout the translation process, I asked Kelsang for more explanation regarding the work's dense symbolism, Indic and Tibetan cultural references and biographical allusions. In interview, Kelsang explained the significance of extended metaphors in the letters; for example, in the first letter, the lotus offering suggests the depth of Gonpo's romantic feelings towards the young nun, who he personifies as a deer. In the second letter, Kelsang identifies as the vulture living alone in the rocky mountain.

इट र्सेट नर्से निवश ग्री से लस प्रव रहेन

मिट्टिं प्यार्थियाः मित्राविका म

सन्दर्शित्रराविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रतिष्ठयाविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्यविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्यविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्यविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्यविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्यविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्यविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्यविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्रविष्ठप्य

सर्वेदिःस्थाराज्यस्य विद्यास्य स्थान

ब्रेन्द्रियाः महत्त्र्यः त्यात्र्या। इत्तर्भवात्रः न्यत्रः स्वात्रः व्यात्रः व्यात्रः व्यात्रः व्यात्रः व्यात्रः व्यात्रः व्यात्रः व्यात्रः व्यात्र इत्तरः विवाद्याः निष्णः श्रीत्रः व्यव्यात्रः व्यात्रः व्यात्र

दे:श्रुेशःतुःस्रिःहेशःतश्रेषाशःत्। दे:श्रुेशःतुःस्रिःदिःद्वःस्रिःह्यः।

(45)पक्रेट्राव्यायास्ट्रार्थ्ययास्ट्रिययास्ट्री चर्ड्यायादेर्ग्यायास्ट्रीयास्ट्री पक्ष्याक्रियादेवास्ट्रीयास्ट्री

नत्वारादादेःधीःसन्तायानरःदेश।

र्हेन्यः मन्यः संदेशः स्वाद्यः स्वेतः स्व स्वेतः स्वेदः स्वः संविद्यः सः स्वेतः स्वेतः सः स्वेतः स्व

याश्वरः त्रवेश्वरः अस्ति वाश्वरः विश्वरः वाश्वरः विश्वरः विश्

बट्याह्मवाड्स्यास्य स्वीतः क्षेत्रः चश्चीरया। च. द्याया स्वाद्यस्य स्वातः क्ष्या नेत्रः त्रायः यदः अर्ते ज्ञाः वदी। (४६) गृदः गोः श्लेखः यसः यत्ने सः स्रसः छै।।

र्श्व कर न्द्र वित्याद्य विद्याद्य विद्य विद्य विद्याद्य विद्य विद्

योःयन्य स्त्रम्यः स्थान्य स्त्रम्यः स्थान्यः स्त्रम्यः स्त्रम्यः स्त्रम्यः स्त्रम्यः स्त्रम्यः स्त्रम्यः स्त्रम् स्त्रम्यः स য়ৢয়ॱয়ঀ৸ॱॸॣॕয়ॱঀৡৼॱয়ঢ়য়ॱसदेॱয়য়ॱৼ৾ৼॱঀৢ৾৽ৢঀয়৻য়ৄ। য়ড়য়৻য়৾য়৽য়ৢয়৽য়ৢঢ়৽য়ড়য়৻য়৽ড়ঢ়৽য়ৣয়৻ঀৢয়৽য়ৢ।

विरः कुरः श्रुँ श्रूरः के नः कुरु करः वी निर्देष ग्रुरः ।। निरुश्च करः निर्देष कर्ने श्रीः क्रिया करः विश्व विष्य विश्व विश्व

हिन् मुन्यसः ह्वान्य निक्षात्र स्टिन्स् क्ष्यास्त्री हिन् मुन्यस्य ह्या स्टिन्स् क्ष्यास्त्री स्टिन्स् स्टिन्स्य

ॐत्रायः प्राचीत्रः विद्याः श्राचीत्रः विद्याः विद्या

डेस:श्वेत्स्य:प्रश्चेत्र:प्रश्चेत्र:प्यत्यःस्यः स्वातः स्वातः स्वातः स्वातः स्वातः स्वातः स्वातः स्वातः स्वातः श्वः त्वात्रसः स्वः स्वातः स्व ट:स्ट:स्थाविह्यस्तुवा

क्षुवास्तरे क्ष्रित्रास्त्र स्त्रीत्र द्यास्तरे क्षेट्र त्यासेन संस्त्रीत स्रोत्रे स्त्र स्याप्त स्त्रीत्र स्रोत्रे स्वर संस्त्र स्त्रीत्र स्त्रीत्र ब्रॅ्न्य्यःस्वित्राःस्वित्रःस्वा द्वेःस्रेत्राःस्यःस्यःस्यःस्वित्राःस्यः। द्यःसदेःक्वेत्रःस्यःस्यःस्वित्रःस्वा ब्र्न्यःस्वित्रःस्यःस्यःस्वा ब्र्न्यःस्वित्रःस्वित्रःस्वा

दीशक्रमासम्मूच्यम् स्वान्त्रम् स्वान्त्रम् स्वान्त्रम् स्वान्त्रम् स्वान्त्रम् स्वान्त्रम् स्वान्त्रम् स्वान्त स्वान्त्रम् स्वान्त्

Dreaming at the Sage's Abode

He had a gaze that was genuinely loving, long and deep, and his personality was relaxed and unhurried; it's not that I didn't long for that, however, I always avoided him because this would not have been the right path.

He had empathy and was sensible. Nor was he stubborn or overly demanding, and he had an aversion towards misconduct. Nor did he focus on my physical or youthful aspects. The essence of our minds was inseparable, as one, and we were emotionally inseparable, but our paths would diverge. No matter the circumstances and at all times, whether joyful or sorrowful, he was continuously friendly and harmonious to be around. Not only that, in general he had no thought of dominating or manipulating others. Beyond having love for me, he didn't scrutinize my skills and abilities or look in the direction of other women. Though his love for me was genuine, I couldn't be free from my personal restrictive vows. I was not an appropriate girlfriend for him. However, I cherished the letters he sent in verse, and needless to say, regarding his genuine good intentions, whenever I review our history of happiness together, what I remember first of all is that his sincerity has been my consolation in sadness and loneliness.

This was inside the first letter Gonpo sent me.

Rich people cannot buy it with wealth,

And the powerful cannot seize or control it.

This heart's personality like a just-blooming spring flower,

This one flower like a smile, to whom do I offer it?

The girl-practitioner who stays in a mountain retreat,

Having followed a female deity up the mountain—

If I were to offer her that uncontrived flower,

What's the use? Is there any need?

If there were a lady unshackled by nun's robes,

Nor dressed in the artificial clothes of ordinary women,

If there were a lady free of hypocritical conduct,

I'd want to place a suitable flower garland around her neck.

An old hunter man's bow and arrow

Chases a deer away from the herd, into the middle of nowhere—

She wanders into an erosion of frightening desert abyss.

If there were a deer in this condition, I'd wish to help her and give her a garland,

A welcoming gift, to comfort her—

If there were a deer like this, I'd be her savior.

Secret tears gather inside, while outside,

I exhale a long, painful sigh.

If there were a sick person with a disease

hard to cure, I'd offer this heart's flower

As medicine, comfort and cure.

If there were a beautiful girl with hundreds of doubts

At an intersection, not knowing which way to turn,

I would give her good guidance and direction.

Without grasping weapons

Such as bow and arrow, spear, or sword,

She wins the war and repels demons.

Courageous warrioress holding a pen,

With raised hands, I would offer you this flower.

Between bone and skin, root extends,

Sustained and nourished by warm vital blood.

This priceless lotus flower—

Will you accept this flower in both hands?

He sent me this. I had already decided to become a nun, so the words of love letters were long dead in my mind; I had been satisfied not to act on those feelings in the past. Now that I received his letters, feelings which I'd thought were dead revived and came back to me like a zombie, and I felt scared and very uncomfortable. Then I sent him a reply.

In the past, when yogis practiced Chod in the cemetery with kangling flute,

No one ever summoned me, the vulture.

In the mythical story, the lonely vulture stays by herself in the sunshine of a rocky mountain nest.

Then I heard your voice, and reflecting upon the account of my loneliness,

I sighed a deep yawn.

Though I'd lived in the rocky-mountain nest a long time, it was an uncomfortable life and without relaxation.

Then one day, I tired myself out and lost consciousness— I fell into the deep abyss without reference points.

I, the white vulture, fell, and woke up in the middle of nowhere.

I'd been unsuccessful my whole life—then between out-breath and inbreath,

I saw your hand waving and giving me courage.

My one friend through laughter and tears—your comfort is too late for me now.

You know, when my goal was to farm a big fenced-in vegetable garden with edible fruit,

Some of them didn't grow well, even with hard work,

So I gave up gardening;

I'm not admiring the queue of those pursuing worldly aims such as riches, good reputation, and scholarship—

I don't want to be stuck waiting in a long line, legs crossed.

Yes, of course, loneliness is sorrowful,

But even with two together, there isn't always a happy ending—this I've always heard.

If there is no permanent happiness up on a high throne,
I'd prefer my feet wet, walking along a dewy grassland path.
If your heart wasn't pure as a convergence of bright moons,
I wouldn't waste time or money, or ink on paper.
But it wasn't just the many great masters and lamas

Who lived a long time in wilderness— I, Lhamo, would like to follow them up the mountain.

My dear friend from Amdo who sings his feelings out loud,
Please don't send me this heavy, hoarse moaning.
These feelings, whether enticing, or feelings of sorrow and sadness,
Please, I don't need them—

Please, I don t need them—

I don't want to be a prisoner in iron chains.

He sent me many letters, but this was his final letter to me.

A vision of Sarasvati

Really entered my heart,

But Sarasvati's niece hurts my heart.

She totally broke my heart—

You, Lhamo, follow the paths of others.

Lhamo has given up everything to do this.

Then, following Lhamo,
I gave up everything.
You, Lhamo, giving up everything,
You injure me.

But I am a hardy youth. I can take loss and defeat—I can be patient.

Lhamo, your feathered arrow

Has injured this small child.

My rope, like the magician's rope in the jataka tale of King Norsang, Couldn't catch the dakini Lhamo as she flew away.

You, Sarasvati's niece,

Are like a rainbow in the sky.

I am like a deluded young innocent Chasing it, but with no way to catch it. Lhamo, I beg you, please go, go, go To the Pure Land!

As you leave, I offer you a fresh white lotus flower—
As you go higher and higher,
Never look back.
It seems there's no better friend than the Buddha dharma.

t seems there's no better mend than the buddha dharma.

He wrote many other painful poems just for me. Each letter seemed alive—full of living words for my sake alone, but I wanted to adhere to the Buddha's discipline and keep the nuns' Vinaya, so I felt that even if I turned him down, I wasn't really a bad friend.

জ'মাই'অবা'ক্কম'ব্র্'বা| (Remembering My Mother's Handmade Tsampa)

भ्रेत्रभूद्रसहेश। Min-Nangzey

(Translated from Tibetan by Annabella Pitkin)

Abstract: Contemporary Tibetan poet and essayist Min-Nangzey shows how women's lineages of work and oral tradition are vital aspects of the transmission and flourishing of Tibetan culture. She highlights the value of women's caregiving work as mothers and preparers of the Tibetan staple food, through vignettes of her own mother preparing tsampa (roasted barley flour).

Keywords: tsampa, lineage, oral tradition, women's activity, cultural transmission

Translator's Introduction

Memories abide in the physical textures of our bodies and the bodies of those we love, in a smudge of barley flour or in the touch of many fingers on the sides of an old wooden storage box. Memories activate with particular force through the smells and tastes of the food of childhood. The contemporary Tibetan poet and essayist Min-Nangzey invites the reader into an embodied world of sensory memory in the spare, resonant piece translated here. Whether tracing ancestral ties through the remembered aroma of her mother's cooking or mapping the ache of homesickness via the hunger felt in a dream, throughout this piece Min-Nangzey takes tsampa (roasted barley flour) as a touchstone for thinking about cultural continuity through the intimate lens of food and home. Tsampa, that most familiar, quotidian, staple food of the Tibetan world, here forms the vital substance of a generational and personal lineage of memory and transmission.⁶

Min-Nangzey is part of a generation of Tibetan writers and artists who center the lived realities of nomadic life as touchstones of cultural survival. Such familiar daily objects as the black yak hair tent, the grassland itself, or the staple food of tsampa take on a heightened significance under contemporary circumstances, freighted with the pain of imminent loss. Under increasingly intense political and economic pressures, ordinary Tibetan lifeways—the smell of cooking, a turn of phrase, the peg that holds a tent to the ground—resonate with poignant urgency.⁷

Through a series of vignettes of her own mother preparing tsampa during her childhood on the grasslands of Golok in eastern Tibet, Min-Nangzey conveys a sense of women's caregiving work as mothers and as preparers of the Tibetan staple food. These two roles of mothering and preparing food emerge here as inextricably linked with the transmission of culture. Min-Nangzey's mother nurtures her children's physical health with tsampa, while at the same time

⁶ See Shakya 1993; also Lama Jabb 2015.

⁷Lama Jabb 2015; Robin 2014; Ju Kalsang 2006.

she nourishes their relationship to their Tibetan identity. Repeatedly throughout the piece, Min-Nangzey asserts tsampa's special role at the core of Tibetan cultural continuity, in particular when it is a mother's "handmade tsampa." In her words, "tsampa made by a mother's hands...is the special food of the Tibetan people, the best food. Its nourishment is indispensable, essential to Tibetan livelihood."

At a deeper level, as the guardian and provider of the family's tsampa, Min-Nangzey's mother connects her children with an inherited Tibetan past that stretches back to that "primordial ancestor" who has made tsampa-eating possible for Tibetan people in the present day. This link to the resources of the generative past is in fact part of what gives tsampa its special value: "Through toil and sweat, a kind primordial ancestor brought into being this custom of eating tsampa. That makes tsampa our inheritance—the foundation of our lifeforce as one people, and the extraordinary foodway of our shared lineage."

Notably, the "shared lineage" of transmission that Min-Nangzey honors here is a specifically female one, a chain of mothers and daughters who are keepers of the family tsampa box, and with it the family's history, as well as its sustenance. The tsampa box emerges as both the literal repository of nourishment and maternal care, and as the container of irreplaceable oral tradition. By explicitly asserting the value of her mother's tsampa preparation and care work in the home, and more broadly, by asserting the value of women's practices of memory and storytelling, Min-Nangzey focuses on an aspect of women's activity that is often taken for granted or devalued, so familiar as to be invisible. Countering that invisibility, Min-Nangzey here frames women's tsampa-making as part of a lineage that is both ancient and essential to Tibetan cultural flourishing, profoundly worthy of respect. Indeed, Min-Nangzey makes a powerful intervention simply in her use of the term "lineage" (त्र्जून्) for women's knowledge and stories, and for the literal, physical transmission of tsampa and the wooden box that holds it.

"Lineage" is a term usually reserved for religious contexts or for transmissions of scholarly, high-status learning and interpretation, such as literary theory or medicine. Lineage can also refer to the reincarnation sequences of important religious teachers, or the dynastic generations of aristocrats and kings. But here, Min-Nangzey uses the term to assert a lineage of women's knowledge and action, manifest in ordinary household work and caregiving. In this sense, this women's lineage is inseparable from the physical and biological web of family life, which so much of Tibetan Buddhist literature, by contrast, describes as at best an entanglement, and sometimes as a poisonous snare.

Through small details, Min-Nangzey roots this women's tsampa-making lineage in the lived reality of women's hands, bodies, implements, stories, and relationships. Her mother's remembered words are telling: "This tsampa box, which has become grey with sticky dirt, is a precious treasure, a legacy from our kind ancestors." Here, the sticky grey dirt itself hints at the physical traces of generations past, of the mothers, daughters and grandmothers who have all touched and used this wooden "treasure." The sticky dirt on the box speaks of effort, of work, of the difficult struggles of daily life, and the ordinary impermanence of bodies and things. In a similar way, the constant refrain of "hands" and "my mother's hands" running through every section of this piece returns the reader over and over again to the physicality and intimacy of cooking and nurturing, and the tactility of kneading and eating tsampa in particular.

This bodily intimacy heightens the poignancy of Min-Nangzey's subsequent separation from her mother and from her mother's tsampa, in section 4. Although she notes that she loves her mother's tsampa best out of all her siblings, and boldly asserts that "tsampa is a supreme food, from which I will never be parted in my whole life," section 4 sees the narrator on a "lonely path," far from home. In the final dream sequence with which the piece concludes, Min-Nangzey poignantly reflects on her own sense of longing for her mother, and for her family on the grasslands. Expressed as a hunger for the food of her mother's hands, Min-Nangzey's dream evokes the pain of separation from home as an unsatisfied desire for tsampa. As a writer now living in diaspora, Min-Nangzey's grieving metonymy of separation from both her mother and her mother's handmade tsampa expresses her own longing for home, and by extension, the longing of so many others.

The final moments of the dream sequence also hint that the making and partaking of tsampa is linked with ways of being together with others in ongoing forms of relationship. Although never said directly, the closing lines open the possibility that the inheritance of tsampa Min-Nangzey's mother has given to her children is also an inheritance of mutual support and care. Consider the piece's final lines: "But all around me are my siblings. When they get a good look at me, they all hold out both hands. They come crowding around our mother's handmade tsampa." Part of the poignancy of these words lies in the reader's confidence that, inspired by her own hunger, Min-Nangzey will surely share her tsampa with all those relatives who long for it.

ल.भदु.जचा. इस.र्थ.ग

- १ इन्दर्भः महिंगः यमा क्रुमः भिराश्चा यह माहे मा के मा के मा यह माहे से मा के मा यह माहे से मा के मा यह माहे मा यह मा यह माहे मा यह मा यह माहे मा यह मा यह माहे मा यह मा यह माहे मा यह मा यह माहे मा यह मा यह मा यह माहे मा यह मा यह माहे मा यह म
- १ पर्ट्निः स्रवे स्रायाः चित्रः स्रवे स्र
 - द देन्रक्ट्योभीट्राञ्चराम्यान्वेर्येर्वर्त्वरह्म्यविष्णस्य व्याप्यम्यम्य

क्षात्रभावित्वराष्ट्रित्वर्थः क्षेत्रभावित्वराष्ट्रित्वर्थः विवाद्यः विवादः विवादः

५ इव्यानुर्यं व्यान्त्रा विर्मेश्वराध्यायम् विरम्भित्यस्य विरम्भितस्य विरम्भित्यस्य विरम्भित्यस्य विरम्भित्यस्य विरम्भित्यस्य विरम्भित्यस्य विरम्भितस्य विरम्य

द्रवा-वीक्ष-वीद्र-विद्याचा-बुद्य-विद्य-विद्य-विद्य-विद्य-विद्य-विद्य-विद्य-विद्य-विद्य-विद्य-विद्य-विद्य-विद्य विद्य-विद्य-विद्य-विद्य-विद्य-विद्य-विद्य-विद्य-विद्य-विद्य-विद्य-विद्य-विद्य-विद्य-विद्य-विद्य-विद्य-विद्य-वि

Remembering My Mother's Handmade Tsampa

1. Among those Tibetans who start their lives among the black yak hair tents that flourish on the grasslands, not a single one grows up without being nurtured on their mother's handmade tsampa. I myself am an example. As a nomad girl, I too grew up savoring the tsampa my mother made.

Consider it: tsampa made by a mother's hands. It is the special food of the Tibetan people, the best food. Its nourishment is indispensable, essential to Tibetan livelihood.

2. Through toil and sweat, a kind primordial ancestor brought into being this custom of eating tsampa. That makes tsampa our inheritance—the foundation of our lifeforce as one people, and the extraordinary foodway of our shared lineage. It's no wonder that our people are often called "the black-haired tsampa eaters." Few are the Tibetans who don't like tsampa, for that reason.

Take me for instance: I also like eating tsampa, because I'm a Tibetan. In particular, I love eating my mother's handmade tsampa, which fills my family's wooden storage box.

I've clung to the memory of that square wooden box, in front of my family's red hearth, with my mother in charge of it.... Every time she cooked, a delicious smell would spread, as mother's handmade tsampa heated up, bubbling and steaming. Every time I would savor that smell, I would be consumed with longing, as if for the first time. Immediately, it would make me ravenous to eat. I would eagerly hold out my hand time and time again.

3. My mother hand-mills the tsampa kept inside my family's square wooden box. This hand-milled tsampa is a cherished treasure passed on in a lineage from our ancestors. For thousands of years of history, generations of oral tradition have emphasized how it keeps one's whole body youthful and vibrant. That's why every single one of my siblings has been nurtured on our mother's handmade tsampa.

And yet, even compared to my other siblings, I was a daughter who specially loved to savor the tsampa made by our mother's hands. For as long as my mother and I were inseparable, I was never parted from the tsampa my mother made. In that sense, my mother's handmade tsampa is what has infused life into the very marrow of my bones.

4. My mother used to say, "This tsampa box, which has become grey with sticky dirt, is a precious treasure, a legacy from our kind ancestors." Mother would continue, "Moreover, later on, you will have to pass this tsampa box on to your own daughter." She told me this many times. Not only that: each and every time, my mother would also recount a long oral tradition linked to the tsampa box.

All of which is to say, I am a girl nurtured on her mother's handmade tsampa. That tsampa is a supreme food, from which I will never be parted in my whole life. It's a core element of my very lifeforce. And yet. Despite all of this, I have turned toward a lonely path, parting me from my mother. And so, in the same way, I have been parted from the tsampa made by my mother's hands.

5. In the here and now, loneliness burdens me, and the heavy ache of tormenting memory. In this four-cornered room, alone as usual, I bring my mother's smiling face to mind. Remembering Mother's handmade tsampa, tears leak across my cheeks. Then, unbidden, I remember last night's dream.

In the dream, the two of us, my mother and I, are together near the black yak-hair tent. My mother is kneading hot handmade tsampa just as usual. She places some into my hands. I miss my mother's tsampa so sharply that I long to eat it all. But all around me are my siblings. When they get a good look at me, they all hold out both hands. They come crowding around our mother's handmade tsampa.

Works Cited

Jabb, Lama. Oral and Literary Continuities in Modern Tibetan Literature: The Inescapable Nation. Lexington Books, 2015.

Kalsang, Ju. "The Call of the Black Tent." Translated by Francoise Robin. Human Rights and the Arts: An Anthology. Edited by Theodore W. Goosen, Anindo Hazra, Lexington Books, 2006.

- Robin, Francoise. "Literary Lament of a Death Foretold: Tibetan Writers on the Forced Settlement of Herders." Human Rights and the Arts: Perspectives on Global Asia. Edited by Lily Cho and Susan J. Henders, Lexington Books, 2014.
- Shakya, Tsering. "Whither the Tsampa Eaters?" Himal Southasian. September 1, 1993.

 $\underline{https://www.himalmag.com/whither-the-tsampa/}$

ন্ন্ন্নি জে'ব'ন্ন'জ'বনি ম্না (My Father's Skills) শু'ট্না Mutik

(Translated from Tibetan by Nicole Willock)

Abstract: Written and translated for the second Tibetan Women's Writing Symposium at the University of Virginia in April 2022, Mutik's memoir draws upon everyday objects to poignantly reflect on her childhood. Feelings of regret mingle with questions of Tibetan identity as she recalls her childhood wish to wear new store-bought clothes when her father, a tailor of incredible expertise, had made her traditional Tibetan clothing. Built on mutual trust and intimacy in shared reading practices, the approach to the translation of this piece was dialogical whereby authorial and translation choices were discussed throughout the process.

Keywords: translation theory, childhood memories, Tibetan identity, father-daughter relationships, Tibetan traditional clothing

Translator's Introduction

My reflections on this translation of "My Father's Skills" (মহ্মা ম্বিরার্থা), an autobiographical memoir by Nyima Tso/Mutik, draw on insights from translation theorists that view acts in the translation process as involving ethical decision-making. The translation process was dialogical between the author and me, the translator. This entailed surrendering both to the text and to the other as our friendship grew in moments of intimacy that the shared act of reading requires. We also formed a trust in each other and in our shared ethical values and commitments, in particular to the promotion of Tibetan literature in the world today despite our very different subject positions.

Nyima Tso left her home near Labrang Tashikyil Monastery in Gansu Province in 1999, when she was only fifteen. She then earned a bachelor's and a master's degree from the Norbulingka Institute in Himachal Pradesh, India, where she currently works as a production manager. She published a book of poems with Jamphel Drolma, First Journey of this Life (के के दिन्दिन प्राप्त कर्ति कर्ति (क्षे के प्राप्त कर्ति कर्ति कर्ति विकास कर्ति क्षिति कर्ति क्रिक्ट कर्ति कर्ति कर्ति क्रिक्ट क्रिक

Within the framework of the Tibetan Women's Writing Symposium, I first met Nyima Tso over Zoom in the summer of 2020 when we mutually developed a dialogical approach to reading and translating her award-winning poem, "Life in Samtha/the Borderlands" (ས་མབའོ་བ།). This culminated in several public bi-lingual readings and its publication in A Living Treasure: Tibetan and Buddhist Studies in Honor of Janet Gyatso. Nyima Tso wrote "My Father's Skills" for the second Tibetan Women's Writing Symposium which took place in person at the University of Virginia in April 2022. She chose her subject matter—childhood memories of her native Amdo—because she knew Tibetan writers from China were attending the symposium. The Tibetan-language memoir was also posted on Facebook. The inspiration for this piece came from the organizers celebrating Tibetan women's writing, and in this way, the inspiration was also inherently dialogical.

The translation process involved surrendering to the text and to each other in reading together both Tibetan and English texts. Lawrence Venuti (The Translation Studies Reader; The Translator's Invisibility, among others) brings attention to the ethical dimensions of inscribing and domesticating foreign language literature. The process of domestication—turning a foreign text into an English one usually begins with the translator's choice to translate a particular text. In this case, I, as translator, stepped back from making this choice and surrendered to the author's choice to decide which text of her corpus should be translated. In her seminal essay, "The Politics of Translation,"8 Gayatri Chakravorty Spivak brings attention to a feminist approach of surrendering to the linguistic rhetoricity of the text in the intimate act of reading while also considering the status of language in the world. After reading through the Tibetan of "My Father's Skills" a couple of times on my own, Nyima Tso and I met on Zoom to read and discuss the text together in the same process that we had used for translating "Life in Samtha/the Borderlands" (মামর্থীবের্ট্রানা). I attentively listened to the cadence and affective inflections of Nyima Tso's voice during her recitation in Amdo dialect, a form of spoken Tibetan that I had learned during my dissertation fieldwork. Then after each of our sessions, I drafted an English translation, which I shared with her and which we discussed further.

⁸ Venuti 2002, 369–387.

After finishing the first good complete draft of the translation, I let it rest for some months before returning to it for final edits. I noticed upon re-reading that the opening paragraph of "My Father's Skills" might need a few additional words for an Anglophone readership without which readers could not understand how this memoir relates to Nyima Tso's other occupation as a translator from English into Tibetan and as an entrepreneur. Nyima Tso has translated over fortyfour children's books into Tibetan from English (in the World Explorer Series of Manoj Publications, Delhi). Noticing the paucity of interesting Tibetan-language children's books, she began translating them on her own with the goal to awaken children's curiosity. Readers of these series follow the main character Benny on adventures through various landscapes to cope with extreme cold or to find water in the wild (For more information on this series, contact: Mutik Books mutikbooks@gmail.com). So, Nyima Tso bought the mini-portable sewing machine mentioned in the first paragraph of "My Father's Skills" for the purpose of wrapping parcels of children's book to ship them from her home in Himachal Pradesh to other parts of India and abroad. For readers of the original Tibetan this context is understood. However, for English readers, I contextualized this by adding "Tibetanlanguage" before "children's books" and interpolated "from India."

In that intimate act of reading, "My Father's Skills" also evokes affective dimensions of the complicated father-daughter relationship. Two scenes were particularly salient for me as they evoked my own memories of joy, shame, and regret. The joyous laughter of youth playing on a "horse" sewing stool brought me back to the endless hours of playing pretend as a kid. The pangs of regret and shame of the young Nyima Tso standing in the courtyard listening to the school principal rekindled those feelings in the adult me of realizing how unappreciative I was as a child of my father's hard work and good advice. In this way, "My Father's Skills" encompasses the universal themes of childhood and coming of age.

However, these universal themes exploring the father-daughter relationship from childhood to adulthood take place in the specific context of Gansu Province, Eastern Tibet, of the People's Republic of China in the 1990s. When translating specific Tibetan terms, the reader surrenders to my choice of retaining the foreign word in the English-language text. In this case, in leaving chuba untranslated, it is incumbent upon readers to either familiarize themselves with this traditional Himalayan clothing, or not. The first time I use the term, however, I provided an English translation differentiating chuba made from lambskin (tsharu) or from sheepskin (logpa). We also discussed technical terms related to sewing machines, which I studied online. Later Nyima Tso showed me photos of her father's tailor supplies and materials and the "horse" sewing stool that he made (see figures).

Nyima Tso's writings, including "My Father's Skills" and "Life in Samtha/the Borderlands," show her versatility as an author. She writes, whether in prose or poetry, with a sensibility that evokes complex and conflicting emotions. Since we began working with each other in the pandemic, I have come to admire Nyima Tso's tireless efforts to promote Tibetan language among Tibetan women and children in exile. I think we share a similar value and understanding that if Tibetan language is to survive into the 22nd century and grow as a world language in the 21st century, it is through her interventions of teaching the youth and encouraging women to write in Tibetan.

However, there are many challenges. When we last met in November 2023, I learned that despite her position as executive secretary of the Tibetan Writers Abroad PEN Centre (PEN TIBET) and as editor of Mayum (হালুহা), the latest issue of Mayum, a literary magazine showcasing female Tibetan writers in exile, had to be postponed because there were not enough contributions. Nyima Tso attributed this to several factors including the precarious political position of Tibetan refugees and how Tibetan women often become overburdened with family or work life to continue writing.

Father's sewing machine at her family home © Gom Mei, 2022

The "horse" stool © Gom Mei, 2022

नन्नानी'अ'स'न्र-अ'सदे'सन्निश्

दशः इं विषयः स्वर्यः स्वर्यः यद्देशः विषयः विषय

देन्द्रेन्द्रम् स्वान्त्रम् स्वान्त्रम्यस्वान्त्रम्यस्वान्त्यम्यस्वन्त्रम्यस्वन्त्यस्वन्त्रम् स्वान्त्रम् स्वान्त्रम् स्वान्त

ড়ास्तरे द्वेताया देना स्वता की स्थान स्थान कि न्या स्थान की न्या स्थान स्थान की न्या स्थान स्था

श्रेच स्थान्य स्थान्त स्थान्य स्थान्त स्थान्य स्थान्य स्थान्त स्थान स्थान्त स्थान स्थान स्थान्त स्थान्त स्थान स्थान स्थान्त स्थान स्थान स्थान्त स्थान्त स्थान्त स्थान्त स्थान स्थान स्थान्त स्थान स्थान स्थान्त स्थान स्यान स्थान स्थान

ढ़ॖऀढ़ॱॻऻॖॖॖऀॼॱख़ॸॣॸॱक़ॖॏढ़ॱॾ॓ॱक़ॣॖॕक़ॱॷॺॱॴॸॱऻ ॸऒॖ॔ज़ॱज़ॣॖॖॖॖॸॱॻय़ॖॱॿॖॎऀॹॱॼॹॱॶॖऺॻऻ॔॔॔ऄ॔

त्नुत्रः अध्यायात् तुरः है विवाण्यतः विवाणतः वि

र्म् म्यान्ते प्रियान्ते स्थान्ते स्थाने स

यभ्रास्त्रात्त्रीत्त्रात्त्रम् अत्यत्त्रीत्त्रात्त्रम् अत्यत्त्रीत्त्रम् वित्रम् वित्

दे-देद-वेद-अेद-दु-क्यूद-विरेश्वनशनदे-वळेंग्न-विदेश-द-वि-श-द-वाज-वि-वर्वे-

श्चीयः श्चीयः विवाद्यां व

लासायाया नगदाद्वेदाको द्वाचीयात्त्रात्त्त्रात्त्त्रात्त्त्रात्त्त्रात्त्त्रात्त्त्रात्त्रात्त्रात्त्रात्त्रात्त्रात्त्रात्त्

My Father's Skills

I bought a handheld mini-sewing machine online, mainly for making fabric covers needed to ship parcels of Tibetan-language children's books from India. The day that I got it, I tried it out; it seemed to work well at first, but then it jammed. A couple of months passed, and I didn't touch it.

Today as I looked in the direction of that mini-sewing machine perched on the corner of a table, it caught my eye, and my father's large sewing machine came to mind. My father is a tailor, but he's not an ordinary tailor just for local households; he's a travelling tailor for an entire district. With that said, I am not only referring to my father being a tailor. My father is kind-hearted, so if someone asked him to do some work, he agreed without hesitation, and then set off to their house. Every now and then, one family after another placed orders; then, father left us, and a few months passed. On the day that father returned home, he told endless stories about having wandered from one village to the next, and about making a chuba from tsharu (lambskin) or from logpa (sheepskin), and how such-and-such a family's tsharu had added sable fur on its edges, or how a groom's coat had a leopard skin collar. When my father was at home, he was always holding sewing materials—threads, needles for Tibetan shoes, or pieces of fake fur, tsharu, or logpa. Neighbors and acquaintances would stop by to order a particular item or to order clothes for a new bride or new groom in the village.

Considering my father's kind-hearted nature, one might think that wearing fine Tibetan clothing every day would not have been a problem for my family—my brothers, sisters, and myself. But when I was attending elementary school and my father made me Tibetan style tops and trousers, I definitely had negative karmic tendencies and a stupid way of thinking. Since all the children were wearing fashionable store-bought clothes, and I was the only one to wear homemade Tibetan clothes, I was embarrassed. These days I think about that time and feel immense regret. I now think that in school, I was the luckiest girl and there wasn't anyone like me. At that time, I didn't know the value of things, but who's to blame for ignorance and what's its use? At the beginning of winter, my father made my mother, sisters, and I beautiful Tibetan shoes, but I nearly went crazy thinking of how boring and strange they were. I thought such things as, "Again this winter, like the last one, I am not lucky enough to wear new shoes," and I agonized over this. Every night I hugged my mom's neck, and I begged, "Please, please, please, buy me a new pair of shoes." I remember this clearly now.

As a child, I was conscious that my father and mother were talented in handicrafts and that my father had a sewing machine. Because my father was skilled in carpentry too, he built a foldable extension table that was joined to the sewing machine. When that table was extended to its full length, he laid out a large chuba on the sewing machine. My father also made a wooden stool for this, which my family called "the sewing machine stool." When my father wasn't at home, three or four of us kids would ride it. We played games continuously, like pretending a horse was galloping into town, or that during a horse race, we picked up a white scarf-khatag from the ground. Sometimes the stool became unbalanced, tipped over, and we hit our heads. We fell over and over again like this, countless times. It was as if my father's stool was made of cement because not even the slightest piece of wood split. When I think of this now, I doubt that a modern chair used in the way that we had used the-sewing-machinestool would last even a day. The stool my father made, a piece of our family's furniture, was used for decades and decades.

My father still has an iron. It is made out of bronze and looks just like a small cooking pan with a handle. It looks like you could pick it up easily with only one hand, but it's so heavy that I can barely pick it up, holding it with both hands. My father used to fill it with coals of dried yak dung and place it on the stove to keep it hot. Occasionally when he was making Tibetan clothing, he sprayed a sip of water over the cloth and slowly dragged the iron over it to press the seams together. I recollect that from time to time, my father called us children to stand near him; each of us held up a section of the Tibetan cloth and stretched it out with full strength, then he put it back down and sprayed a mouthful of water and ironed it some more.

I remember that in the twelfth month of the Tibetan calendar, each family took turns to host a prayer ceremony and a meal; at those times, everybody gathered together. On one such occasion, the head of a household looked at me and said, "You're the daughter of a very skilled tailor. You are not like other children. You are dressed so well!" I was so sad and couldn't bear what he had said and went to my mother's side and cried it all out. This was because I was the only child who wore Tibetan dress and every morning my father tied a Tibetan belt around my waist. It was so tight that I couldn't untie it myself without the help of an adult. In those days, I got caught up in desiring the store-bought clothes worn by the other kids. Once I even thought about setting all my Tibetan clothes on fire and scowled at my father.

Later, I attended a Tibetan middle school, and the school's policy was special. If a student was Tibetan, then either they had to wear Tibetan clothes, or if they didn't have Tibetan clothes, they had to wear a uniform, or else they weren't permitted to attend school. At that time, I myself felt older and being that I was almost free from my father's orders, I thought I could wear whatever I wanted, whatever clothes that I liked. For a while, I had thoughts of throwing all my Tibetan clothes away as I pondered deeply that not even the slightest shadow of clothes that my father had made would fall anywhere on my body. Then the school principal stood in the front of an assembly and announced, "Students whose parents are Tibetan should wear Tibetan clothes. If you don't wear Tibetan clothes, since you are Tibetan by flesh and blood, how can you wash that away? So, since you are confident at the thought of being a Tibetan, you should wear Tibetan clothing! If we don't wear our own ethnic clothing, then who will?" At that, I felt such unbearable regret, that when I went home on the weekend, I asked my father to please make a Tibetan chuba for me. My father wore white-rimmed glasses and said that it was getting difficult to thread a needle. In the end, by working day and night, he completed a simple chuba for me. It wasn't my father's idea of a chuba. He made it according to my wishes—with shorter and tighter-fitting sleeves. As I was about to return to school my father observed, "That teacher is Tibetan to the bones. I don't need to say much because that teacher convinced you that your father wasn't wrong earlier. Even if I lose my eyesight, you'll wear Tibetan clothing."

Today this useless mini-sewing machine stirred up memories of my father's sewing machine. His sewing machine worked for years and years without even the slightest problem. I think I can say without exaggeration that his sewing machine made thousands upon thousands of chuba. Today, I think how wonderful it would be if a tailor like my father or an instrument like my father's sewing machine were near to me. I grew up with such a valuable person. In my youth, I didn't appreciate that, and I feel full of regret. This useless mini-sewing-machine sparked memories of my father, and in turn, it reminded me of his skills at everything. Now I can say that my father was the best tailor and carpenter of my homeland. I can say that he was an expert tailor of Tibetan clothing who accepted not having a salaried job. My father is living proof that my homeland remains a truly incredible place where helping others is valued more than focusing on oneself. Such good fortune can't last indefinitely; if you think about it, this is certain.

Dear Dad,

Thank you. My childhood was not unlucky in the way that I had thought when I was a child. I had a precious childhood in comparison to many other children; I am so grateful for that.

Works Cited

Gayley, Holly, and Quintman, Andrew, editors. Living Treasure: Tibetan and Buddhist Studies In Honor of Janet Gyatso. Wisdom Publishers, 2023.

Nyi ma 'tsho and 'Jam dpal sgrol ma. Mi tshe 'di'i 'grul bzhud theng dang po [First journey of this life] Archana Press, 2003.

- Nyi ma 'tsho. Zur zhig Nyi ma 'tsho' i brtsams sgrung phyogs bsgrigs[A fragment: collection of writings by Nyima Tso]: Archana
 Press, 2009
- Spivak, Gayatri Chakravorty. "The Politics of Translation." In The Translator's Invisibility: A History of Translation, Edited by Lawrence Venuti, 369-388. Routledge, 2018.
- Venuti, Lawrence. The Translation Studies Reader. Routledge, 2000.

 —. The Translator's Invisibility: A History of Translation.

 Routledge, 2018.
- Willock, Nicole. "Samtha/ the Borderlands of Tibetan Translation."

 In Living Treasure: Buddhist and Tibetan Studies in Honor of Janet Gyatso, Edited by Holly Gayley & Andrew Quintman, 77-94. Wisdom Publishers, 2023.

ন্ত্ শ্বিষ্টা স্থান (Silent Dusk) के শ্বিদ্ধান্ত Tsedrön Kyi

(Translated from Tibetan by Erin Burke and Eben Yonnetti)9

Keywords: Tibetan literature, women writers, Tsedrön Kyi, translation, polyandry

Translator's Introduction

Contemporary Tibetan writer Tsedrön Kyi (ক্টাৰ্ক্স্ক্রির) is from Ba County (বননাইনা), in Amdo, close to Tso Ngonpo (মার্ক্টার্ক্স্ক্রাম্) in ⁹We are especially grateful to Tashi Dekyid Monet for first introducing us to this short story and patiently answering numerous questions we had while reading it the first time. Additional thanks go to Tsedrön Kyi for sharing her reflections on this story and permitting us to translate it into English. Finally, we would like to thank all of the participants in the Tibetan Women Writing Symposium for their comments and suggestions on an earlier draft of this translation.

the northeastern region of Tibet. For several decades, she has worked as a Tibetan language and literature teacher at Yushu Nationalities High School in Yushu Tibetan Autonomous Prefecture (খ্ৰাপ্ৰাইন্ট্ৰাম) and written many short stories and essays that have been published in literary journals. Like many other contemporary Tibetan women writers, Tsedrön Kyi writes in her spare time, balancing writing with her career as an educator. Still, she has published two books of her own short stories, A Melancholy Drama (ক্ৰাপ্ৰাইন্ট্ৰামণ্ডৰামণ্ড্ৰামণ্ডৰ Tsedrön Kyi frequently elevates the perspectives of Tibetan women and often centers her fiction around their experiences. She is particularly skillful at conveying the intense unspoken emotions and innermost struggles of women, voices that have been historically underrepresented in much of Tibetan literature. As she noted in a recent interview, she finds inspiration for her short stories in the everyday world around her, often crafting her stories based upon "the general fate of Tibetan women (\(\Tilde{\Tild ¹⁰Tshe sgron skyid 2005.

¹¹ Tshe sgron skyid 2016.

¹² Her essay, মান্তবি অনু ব্যামান্ত্র ক্লিন্ত্র কলেন্ত্র কলেন্ত কলেন্ত্র কলেন্ত্র কলেন্ত্র কলেন্ত কলেন্ত্র কলেন্ত্র কলেন্ত কলেন্ত্র কলেন্ত্র কলেন্ত্র কলেন্ত্র কলেন্ত্র ক intimately familiar with from her career as a secondary school teacher.¹³

"Silent Dusk" (মৃ.শ্রমান্ত্যমান্ত্রমান্ত্রমান্ত্রমান্ত্রমান্ত্রমান্ত্রমান্ত্রমান্ত্রমান্ত্রম (মার্নিস্থ্রাম্ব্রা) and her painful struggles within her polyandrous marriage in rural Tibet. The story is set in an undisclosed village in contemporary Tibet, punctuated with both bucolic images of the Tibetan landscape as well as mobile phones and highways. As the story opens, Metok Lhadzé is gazing off into the sunset on a hilltop near her home, unsettled and restless over the absence of her beloved husband, Wangdül. Confused and anxious, she trudges back to her home where she is confronted with her despised and drunken second husband, Drakpa. Like many other Tibetan and Himalayan women, Metok Lhadzé is in a polyandrous marriage with two brothers whose contrast in terms of education and worldly success, life choices, and temperament toward her are a clear source of tension throughout the story. As darkness engulfs the valley, Metok Lhadzé's hopes dissolve like the red clouds at sunset and Drakpa's drunken rage overwhelms everything. The story ends in blackness.

Although "Silent Dusk" offers only a brief glimpse into one evening of a woman's life, Tsedrön Kyi manages to contrast the tense atmosphere of Metok Lhadzé's claustrophobic helplessness with the spacious emptiness of her environment and what feels like an eternity of loneliness that stretches out before her. She is focused tightly on her white cellphone, her most precious gift from her beloved husband Wangdül, compulsively returning again and again to check for his call.

¹³ Tsedrön Kyi quoted in Bhum and Gayley 2022, 86.

At the same time, the vast sky is slowly darkening, and Metok Lhadzé can see the road stretching far away from her village. She imagines Wangdül in another city with another woman, which seems a world away, but she cowers in her kitchen, avoiding the other husband who has come home.

During the Tibetan Women Writing Symposium held at the University of Virginia in April 2022, Tsedrön Kyi noted that while she wrote the first draft of "Silent Dusk" over the course of one evening in 1997, she continued to return and revise it for over twenty years. The short story is a deeply moving depiction of contemporary Tibetan women's struggles with love, rural life, marriage, and education in a world that seems to offer hope for a better life in the towns and cities just over the horizon. Although the end of the story is heart wrenching, one of the saddest moments in the story is Metok Lhadzé's wish to sit quietly reading next to Wangdül. As an uneducated woman, her wish for literacy is one that Wangdül cannot fulfill. Tsedrön Kyi emphasized in conversation that Metok Lhadzé not only longs for the company of the kinder of her two husbands, but for the educational opportunities that take and keep him so far away from her as well.

Although there are elements of broader social commentary and realism in this story—drunken and absent husbands, inequities in educational opportunities—the story lives in Metok Lhadzé's inner world. Readers do not get a stark depiction of social realities, but a personally inflected lived experience of them from one woman's perspective. Tsedrön Kyi does not portray Metok Lhadzé flatly as a type—a woman oppressed by a traditional marriage custom.

Similarly, we see glimpses of her deadbeat husband Drakpa's personal struggle with his own experience of rural life and a complicated marriage. As despicable as his behavior in the story is, Drakpa seems to face similar frustrations over his limited education and career opportunities, and lack of status as the younger brother in a polyandrous marriage. In our discussions at the Symposium, Tsedrön Kyi emphasized that contrary to what first impressions might impart to readers, her intention in this short story is to take the sides of neither Tibetan women nor men. If she did, she continued, it would not make for a very interesting story.

We chose to translate the title of this story as "Silent Dusk." The Tibetan word khu sim po (() means both "silent" and "without agitation or conflict." Tsedrön Kyi describes the setting sun and darkening valley beautifully, but the dusk that settles around Metok Lhadzé does not ease her mind and bring her peace—just the opposite. Her angst only increases the lower the sun dips below the horizon. We understood "silent," therefore, as having multiple references throughout the story. First, it alludes to Metok Lhadzé's phone, which never brings the sound of Wangdül's call, no matter how desperately Metok Lhadzé wishes it would. Second, Metok Lhadzé is also silent in the story, never once responding to Drakpa's tirade of drunken questions and demands. Finally, the darkening valley is also silent, devoid of the sounds of other life and the motor of Wangdül's car. Given the foreboding quality of the atmosphere and disturbing ending, we hope "Silent Dusk" conveys some of the cruel irony of the original Tibetan title.

Tsedrön Kyi's short stories describe in intimate detail the tremendous struggles and complex emotional tensions experienced by Tibetan women as they navigate their lives in contemporary Tibetan society. Women's obstacles as they pursue an education, attempts to balance familial expectations with their own aspirations, as well as experiences with sexual violence and the pulls and pitfalls of urban life are all important themes across much of Tsedrön Kyi's writings, and are especially central to "Silent Dusk." The first time we read this story, we were both absolutely devastated by it and simultaneously drawn in by the vivid characters and beauty of the prose. Tsedrön Kyi's powerful writing invites readers to envision Metok Lhadzé's dreams and to share in her heartbreak. We hope our English translation conveys the tensions present within Metok Lhadzé's inner life to readers and allows them to enter the world of this beautiful tragedy.

मि.श्रुश्रामद्राश्राश्रूरी

है। ब्रॅन्स्ट्रिस् स्वाचित्र श्रेद्र स्वीच्य स्वेद्र स्वाचित्र स्

विशःस्र्रेरःब्र्यास्य विस्तराविष्ण्याः व्याप्त्राच्याः विस्तर्भः स्राप्ताविष्णः स्रापताविष्णः स्रापति स

"र्से दे। द्विसाय में में अप्तर्या प्रेंचिस प्रेंचिस हे से दिस में भूया के प्रिंचिस है। वर्स दुः प्रेंचिस प्रेंचिस प्रेंचिस के प्रेंचिस के स्वेंचिस है।

यान्यस्य देशे हें ना क्ष्य क्ष्य क्षेत्र स्था क्षेत्र स्

न्नरः त्रन्यः वे ःश्चें नः क्रेवः त्र्यो अर्थें रः नः न्रः नः स्टः श्चें नः व्यो रः नो ः स्त्रः व्यो रः विष्णः न्नो ः स्वतः विषाः भेवा विष्णः अर्थेवः विष्णः यो विष्णः यो स्वरेवः स्वरेवः विष्णः विष्णः विष्णः यो स्वरं विष्ण बुंर्चः च्रान्यसः निर्म्यः स्त्रुः स्त्र्यः स्त्रुः स्त्र्यः स्त्रुः स्त्रुः

वस्यास्यात्रस्य स्वार्त्ते व्याप्त स्वार्त्ते स्वार्ते स्वार्त्ते स्वार्त्ते स्वार्ते स्वार्ते

दीश्चर्यत्वेद्या विद्यःश्चर्याः स्ट्रान्यः स्ट्रान्यः

विभाग्ने मान्त्र मुस्रसार्य मार्थे संवेदायस्य से मिना खुरसहे साम्रीसावता करा द्वारा मान्यास्य स्थान के स्विदा स्वरास्य मार्थे साम्यासी से सिना के साम्यासी स्वरासी स्वरासी स्वरासी स्वरासी स्वरासी

त्यः त्यः वित्यः वित्य

रेवा गुःवहस्रास् न्राम्वेशः ह्युन्वहस्रास् धेन्या प्राप्ता प्राप्ता प्रा

ब्री.व्र-री अ.स्व.क्ष्मान्त्र.क्ष्म

ये. ह्या. सं. त्या. ये. ह्या. यं. त्या. यं. त्या. त्य

वित्यस्त्रत्यस्य वित्रव्यस्य वित्यस्य वित्यस्यस

द्वीः व्ययः नृतः द्वेतः त्वयः क्षेत्रः या वायाः या प्रत्यः विष्यः प्रत्यः विष्यः प्रत्यः विष्यः प्रत्यः विष्यः विषयः विष्यः विषयः विष

"र्स्या हिन्यान्द्रस्थित्यां वहस्य वित्यान्त्रस्थित् वस्य हिन्यान्यस्थित् । वस्य वित्यान्यस्थित् । वस्य वित्यस्थित् । वस्य वित्यस्थितः । वस्य वित्यस्य वित्यस्य वित्यस्य वित्यस्य । वस्य वित्यस्य वित्यस्य वित्यस्य वित्यस्य वित्यस्य । वस्य वित्यस्य वित्यस्य वित्यस्य वित्यस्य वित्यस्य । वस्य वित्यस्य वित्यस्यस्य वित्यस्य वित्यस्यस्य वित्यस्य वित्यस्य वित्यस्य वित्यस्य वित्यस्यस्य वित्यस्य वित्यस्यस्य वित्यस्य वित्यस्य वित्यस्य वित्यस्य वित्यस्यस्य वित्यस्य वित्यस्यस्यस्यस्य वित्यस्य वित्यस्य वित्यस्यस्य वित्यस्यस्य वित्यस्यस्य वित

२०१ (वेदि: ह्यू १०ळे अ २०६े द: ह्यु : तु : तु अ : नर्डे अ

Silent Dusk

Over many months and years, reddish clouds had beautifully adorned the horizon at dusk countless times. Nevertheless, because these clouds created little more than passing beauty, Metok Lhadzé hardly ever noticed this ever-present scene anymore. Today once again, after the sun had set, the red clouds on the western horizon were like an indecipherable¹⁴ oil painting. Even though Metok Lhadzé tried to carefully study and appreciate this wonderous natural image, she wasn't very successful. For a little while, she tapped the white mobile phone in her hand repeatedly against her earring. Her beautiful face, like a full conch-moon, was marked by a longing¹⁵ melancholy as she finally walked down the hill.

Today was Saturday, so Metok Lhadzé had been expecting her elder husband, Wangdül, would come. But, Wangdül hadn't called yet. Could he have been in an accident with a truck on the road? Could he have fallen in love with another woman? What could have happened? In any event, after lunch today Metok Lhadzé had paced up and down the hill behind her home quite a few times. She found the hours difficult to pass in anticipation and worry. Now that twilight had faded, the sky in the valley was almost completely dark and Metok Lhadzé had no choice but to return to the kitchen, her head hanging low.

As soon as she opened the front door, her phone rang. Overjoyed, Metok Lhadzé picked up and placed the phone to her ear.

¹⁴ বৰ্দ্ধিন ব্ৰামান্ত translates literally as "an unclear subject." Tsedrön Kyi explained that here the term is describing a blurry or indecipherable painting, the lack of clarity mirroring the mood of Metok Lhadzé.

¹⁵ दे भूज a term we have translated the term alternately as "longing," "expecting," and "anticipation." It appears three times in the opening lines to this story and is an important descriptor of Metok Lhadzé's emotional state.

"Hey woman! I'm about to head home. Cook up some juicy meat and make some good tea. And don't forget to come and greet me at the door. Got it?" It was Drakpa's unpleasant voice.

Drakpa was Metok Lhadzé's younger husband. He only knew how to trade in odds and ends. He was careless and scatter-brained,¹⁶ and Metok Lhadzé found him impossible to put up with. From inside the bedroom, he would always call to ask her pointless questions, like "Who do you really love?" "Why do you always flash smiles at Wangdül, but barely glance at me?" and so on.

And then there was Wangdül...Wangdül had gone to college and was now a language arts teacher at the county middle school. For his part, he fundamentally disagreed with this polyandrous marriage. However, in addition to his elderly father's commands, his elderly mother had used all manner of ways to force him into it, swearing oath after oath and carrying on. In the end, he had no choice but to renounce his affections and autonomy and marry Metok Lhadzé together with his younger brother, Drakpa.

In reality, it was Wangdül and Metok Lhadzé who were legally husband and wife and had the marriage certificate. Moreover, the white mobile phone Metok Lhadzé used was the best gift Wangdül had ever bought for her. Wangdül didn't express his affection very much, but he loved cleanliness and never said more than was strictly necessary. Usually, he just liked to sit beside his reading lamp and peacefully read his books. In Metok Lhadzé's mind, she would imagine and say to herself over and over again: "If only I had gone to school, then I could sit and read with him. If only our lives could be like that, how wonderful it would be!" Moreover, Wangdül never once told Metok Lhadzé his desires, saying "I need this and that," and so on. Ever since they were married, unless there was some special event, as soon as it was the weekend Wangdül would leave the school and return home. When he came home, he would busy himself right away doing whatever chores he could inside or outside the house. Even when Wangdül wasn't home, he would call Metok Lhadzé on her phone. And so, Metok Lhadzé truly and sincerely loved him.

¹⁶ ธุรุ ัฐเมรารา literally translates to "having a manifold stream of thoughts." Here the term negatively implies Drakpa having an unproductive overabundance of thoughts and ideas.

For the last two weeks, however, Wangdül inexplicably hadn't returned home. He hadn't even so much as called. Metok Lhadzé fell into an abyss of longing and worry. She often cried alone in her kitchen. And, today when she heard Drakpa's unpleasant voice, she felt as if she'd been crushed by a boulder. Her normally relaxed breathing had become labored and difficult.

Just then, Drakpa entered the house accompanied by the overpowering¹⁷ smell of alcohol. His eyes were bloodshot, and strings of spittle spewed everywhere from his mouth when he spoke.

¹⁷ স্কর্মে might also be translated here as "harmful" or "oppressive." We have chosen "overpowering" to connote the strength of this smell and how revolting Metok Lhadzé finds it.

"Hey woman! Why didn't you come out to welcome me home? Ah, Wangdül...you were hoping for Wangdül, huh? But now you're disappointed? 'A white-collar worker'...Phuh!" Drakpa trailed off, and muttering to himself he went straight to Metok Lhadzé's bedroom.

After the others in the house had gone to bed, Metok Lhadzé cooked the meat for Drakpa in the kitchen. All the while, she still really believed that Wangdül's phone call would come.

"Hey woman! Why won't you come near me? Hey woman!" Drakpa called out to Metok Lhadzé, slurring his words.

"That jerk!¹⁹ When he called a little while ago, he didn't seem drunk. Who was he with, and where did he get so drunk in just a half an hour?" Metok Lhadzé cried to no one but herself in the kitchen. A look of panic and helplessness appeared on her face. She touched the phone again and again. She ran her hand across the phone again and again. As she touched the phone, she kept thinking of the soft touch and gentle character of her dear husband, Wangdul.

Suddenly, Metok Lhadzé got up, climbed to the top of the hill again, and looked into the distance. She couldn't see a car—or even a headlight—coming or going on the winding highway leading to the far-off town. All of the peaceful and relaxed twilit surroundings started to ¹⁸ কুলাবেল ট্রান্সেট্রন্সে literally translated means "one who works for the state" which might be translated as "a civil servant." Here Tsedrön Kyi noted that she meant to imply someone with stable office work in contrast to Drakpa's intermittent employment.

^{19 ₹} ५३ translates literally as "corpse-demon." It is a derogatory insult that could also be translated in much harsher terms but is not necessarily an expletive.

blur.

Though Metok Lhadzé ran her hand over the white phone a few times, in the end, she didn't find the courage to call Wangdül. Most likely, Wangdül had a soulmate he could confide in. In all these years, he hadn't sincerely told Metok Lhadzé anything that was truly from the heart, but there is no such thing as a normal marriage without problems. Metok Lhadzé certainly knew all of these things. Nevertheless, Wangdül's easy-going temperament, kind speech, gentle touch, and understanding nature had made her so happy. Every one of Wangdül's calls had given her tremendous hope, and that gentle disposition and clear voice of his had pulled her out of hell and into heaven.

Darkness is a cruel predator and seemed in the span of a single instant to begin to devour this small, insignificant valley whole. Now no one could see very far at all.

The white phone made no sound at all. Yesterday's words repeated again in her mind, "Really, no one should rely on worldly hopes and happiness. Those are just like the red clouds on the horizon." Dragging her feet heavily, Metok Lhadzé went back down the hill.

Like a child lost in dreams and fantasies, as Metok Lhadzé was about to come through the door to the bedroom she closed the white phone with trembling hands. She let out a long sigh, and, as usual, got into Drakpa's bed.

"Hey woman! Where did you disappear to? Were you waiting for that accomplished man? Tell me! Speak!" Drakpa grabbed Metok Lhadzé by the hair and shook her a few times. Suddenly, intoxicated with desire, he began to have his way with Metok Lhadzé without restraint.

In the sky, the moon had no brightness, and even the constellations did not shine. Everything was just like the terrifying Lord of Death's²⁰ difficult path.

Revised in Kyegu, October 30, 2019.

Works Cited

Bhum, Somtso, and Holly Gayley. "Capturing the Quotidian in the Everyday Renunciation of Buddhist Nuns in Tibet". Journal of Tibetan Literature, Vol. 2, no. 1, July 2023, pp. 45–72, Doi:10.58371/jtl.2023.61.

Dpal mo, rtsom sgrig pa. Deng rabs bod rigs bud med kyi dpe tshogs las sgrung rtsom phyogs bsgrigs, Beijing: Krung go'i bod rigs dpe skrung khang, 2011.

—, rtsom sgrig pa. Bod kyi deng rabs bud med rtsom pa po'i dpe tshogs. Chengdu: Si khron mi rigs dpe skrung khang, 2016.

²⁰ Shin jé (স্বাইন) in Tibetan or Yamarāja in Sanskrit, is a wide-ranging deity in Tibetan Buddhism. In paintings of the wheel of life (মুদ্দেই ব্রহিন্দ্রেই) he is depicted as the personification of death, holding all of cyclic existence in his grasp. In images of the hell realms, Shin jé is depicted as the king of the hungry ghosts, judging beings who have been born in the hell realms.

Tshe sgron skyid. Skyo snang gi zlos gar. Kan su'u mi rigs dpe skrung khang, 2005.

- —, Zhen. Si-khron Mi-rigs Dpe-skrun Khang, 2016
- —. "Mi tshe'i bzhud lam khrod rnyed pa'i 'od snang dang dad mos." Bud med rtsom pa pos gsar rtsom gleng ba, Edited by Lcags rdor rgyal and Go zhul grags pa 'byung gnas, Mtsho sngon mi rigs dpe skrun khang, 2017, pp. 221–60.

爱是一双出发的箭 (Love Is a Pair of Unloosed Arrows) 白玛娜珍 བạ་ལྡ་མང་ས། Baimanazhen

(Translated from Chinese by Jue Liang and Andrew S. Taylor)

Abstract: Baimanazhen is one of the most celebrated and prolific Sinophone Tibetan women writers. This essay provides a brief biography as well as a discussion of the major themes and techniques of her works. Translated from Chinese into English for the first time, the essay "Love Is a Pair of Unloosed Arrows" tells the story of Yangchen and Dundrup, a pair of former extramarital lovers turned spiritual companions.

Keywords: Baimanazhen, Sinophone Tibetan literature, essay, creative nonfiction, women in Tibet

Translators' Introduction

Baimanazhen (Tib. 双京文文文文), Chn. 白玛娜珍, b. 1967) is a prolific writer who works across many genres. She was born in Lhasa into a family established in the local literary circle: Her father worked at the Lhasa branch of Xinhua News Agency, an official state news agency and publisher, and her mother was also a writer. She writes in Chinese about her experiences as a Tibetan woman in a variety of vocations: professional dancer, radio host, and television producer, among many others. Her first career as a dancer took her all over Tibet, that she witnessed contemporary Tibetans facing during her travels, as in the essay translated below. Other topics include her friendships with conservative nuns and Lhasa socialites, her pilgrimages to sacred sites, and her reflections on the materialist influences of city life. Her writings include the novel Lhasa, World of Dust (Chn. 拉萨红尘), translated into English as Love in Lhasa by James Yongue and Wan Jiahui.²¹ Set in 1980s Lhasa, the novel follows the trajectories of two young Tibetan women, Nangsa and Yama, as their lives unfold in two divergent directions. It received an honorable mention in the fiction category at the Second Women's Literature in China Awards

.

Baimanazhen's essay "Love Is a Pair of Unloosed Arrows," translated below, has been selected from her collection Lhasa Rain (Chn. 拉萨的际). "Arrows" is a brief but penetrating essay that caused the translators some angst in capturing its subtleties. As such, they are grateful for the opportunity to direct the reader's attention to some of its more profound passages and perhaps hedge their own shortcomings.

One of the most eye-raising aspects of the essay for readers not familiar with Tibetan monastic culture is the relationship between Dundrup and Yangchen, neighbors turned lovers turned quasi-monastic partners. Is their relationship scandalous? An instance of redeemed forbidden love? Not exactly. Although certainly not normative, it is not surprising that relationships between men and women, including monks and nuns, have always been complex in a society where as much as fifteen to twenty percent of the population might enroll as monastics at some point in life.²² Although some monastics take tonsure as adolescents and maintain their monastic vows their entire lives, others might enroll only during their adolescence, after a longtime spouse has passed, or even for a predetermined period of time in adulthood. In Tsering Yangzom Lama's novel We Measure the Earth with Our Bodies, a novel that explores similar social complexities, a Tibetan woman is told of a potential love interest, "Don't pity him. He's a monk now." Only for her to rejoin, "Maybe he won't always stay a monk." The remark is met with laughs and a perfunctory swat.²³ Yangchen and Dundrup's relationship, although unorthodox and no doubt a subject of gossip in their original community, is not unique or unintelligible. It also sets in motion a complicated emotional dynamic that gives an element of dramatic tension to what might otherwise seem like a character study. One Chinese friend to whom the translators gave the essay exclaimed halfway through, "Is Yangchen going to be the author's mother?"

²¹ Nordrun 2015. The translators of the novel made a mistake in rendering Baimanazhen's name, hence the discrepancy.

Another especially interesting dimension of Baimanazhen's essay is its centering of the silent Yangchen. Her physical presence and silence are deftly juxtaposed in the story's central paradox. The first time the author visits Yangchen, she has taken a vow of silence, and so sits by silently as Dundrup tells their—her—story, emoting, but not contributing verbally. The second time the author visits the hermitage, she has physically departed—only upstairs, for a brief retreat, but renders herself inaccessible to the author and the world outside her small hut. Has she surpassed Dundrup spiritually and transcended the mundane "world of dust," or is her silence socially expected?

²² Ryavec and Bowman 2021.

²³ Lama 2022, 172.

Nevertheless, there are two significant moments when the author either intuits Yangchen's thoughts despite her lack of communication or perhaps projects her own emotions onto the silent practitioner. The first time is in one of the most interesting and only explicitly philosophical passages in the essay:

Yangchen's face was covered in tears. She thought, the river that runs through the village has flowed so far only to arrive here. In the same way, all of her and Dundrup's karma across many lifetimes had led to their coming together. Just as a river cannot flow backward, their relationship was fated and could not be reversed.

How does the author know this? Does she know what Yangchen is thinking or does she merely think that she knows what Yangchen is thinking? Is she recording something Yangchen told her later, after her day of silence? The reader is not told but is left to wonder if there is some sort of shared experience or bond that unites them across the silence.

The second time comes in a more explicitly gendered passage, when the author asks Yangchen if she misses the children she has abandoned to go practice with Dundrup—a question that she does not ask Dundrup, who also left his children:

Yangchen was taking a vow of silence that day. My question about her children startled her. She looked dazed and stopped fingering her prayer beads. But she shook her head in silence. The resolution in her expression made my tears begin to flow. I could almost feel the agony that her maternal heart must have experienced.

Yangchen shows only silent resolution, but the author interprets her headshake as intense maternal sadness, despite no indication that this is the case. Is the author making a mistake in her projection? Is she showing us the inaccurate conception of a shared women's essence commonly imposed by readers, or is she sincerely asserting the existence of a maternal sadness as a gendered universal?

In addition to centering Yangchen as a subject, we also see the author's concern for women's experiences in the discussion of the domestic objects that thread the essay together. The trope of the ignorant city-dweller hiking up to the mountains to receive a teaching is established in the initial description of the hermitage's proximity to Samye, its remoteness, and its sacred pedigree. And yet when the author arrives, she instead provides a catalogue of domestic objects, focusing on kitchenware instead of meditative practices—dark red clay teapots, a stove for butter tea, the happiness of the nuns going about their morning chores, descriptions of the small huts that had been built brick by brick and plank by plank. Similarly, when the author returns to the nunnery after a nine-year absence, she shows how the hermitage has changed by talking about the new objects that have appeared in the kitchen, for instance an olive-green blender operated by a new nun. Even in a place built for transcendence, gendered mundanity is never elided.

The translators were equally baffled by what might seem like minor technical difficulties, which we found nevertheless were hubs for the larger socio-political issues at work in the piece. These difficulties began with the title, which might be translated as "Love Is a Pair of chufa Arrows." But what to do with this chufa? The word can be used as a noun or verb and is most commonly translated as "departure" or "start" in Chinese—for instance, a plane or ship leaving port can chufa, as can a person or army leaving a city. But arrows do not commonly chufa—would it be best to capture that awkwardness in English, for instance as "Love Is a Pair of Departing Arrows"? It's a tricky tradeoff—an English reader might well blame the translators or, more significantly, the author, and not read the piece instead of assuming that the awkwardness is intentional. Our sense is that the title describes the arrows immediately after they have been shot from a bow, soaring but not aimed toward any particular target, except perhaps beyond.

A final point worth communicating in this work of creative nonfiction is that the author writes herself as a character. For anyone who has met Baimanazhen, it is difficult to imagine such a kind and considerate woman barging into houses and interjecting herself between a monastic couple—is she perhaps the beetle crawling through the open windowpane? This perpetual discomfort in her own space and body, as well as her surprise when the monk speaks fluent Chinese, among other scenes, depict a sense of dislocation that is perhaps felt by much of the Sinophone Tibetan community more generally.

Ensuring that Tibetan remains a viable language in arts, politics, and the home is one of the great challenges facing the contemporary Tibetan community, one that all Tibetan studies academics should work to support. We hope this Yeshe volume reflects that concern by providing bilingual editions, which will allow native Tibetan readers to read along while also allowing students of Tibetan or second-generation Tibetans access to the original works. But the same colonial and neoliberal forces that have threatened the Tibetan language with functional extinction have also alienated many Tibetans from their mother tongue—Tibetans who, through no fault of their own, have grown up in Sinophone, Anglophone, or other linguistic spheres, and we risk erasing their experiences if they too are not recognized as part of the Tibetan literary community. Baimanazhen shows the possibility of using Chinese to communicate the experiences of many contemporary Sinophone Tibetans in Tibet, ranging from their liminal status to their reverence for Buddhism, with all its lived ambivalences and complexities.

爱是一双出发的箭

九年前的一个夏天,我和朋友第一次去青朴。

青朴位于西藏山南地区扎囊县,在县内桑耶寺东北约15公里的纳瑞山腰,海拔4300米,纳瑞山被称为青朴。传说是从前山上有一户青氏家族。藏传佛教宁玛派创始人莲花生、西藏第一位女密宗大师益西措加、寂护大师、藏王赤松德赞、密宗大师白若扎纳等都曾在青朴山上修法。青朴是西藏最著名的隐修圣地。从桑耶寺坐船横渡雅鲁藏布江,对岸,就是青朴了。

青朴大山像伸开手臂在等候我们。胸膛盛开着野蔷薇花和缤纷的 山花。 山半腰,有一所小"文则寺"。天已晚,寺院住持顿珠拉(化名)安排我们在寺里一间空房里住下。

顿珠拉高高的个子,微微有些驼背,戴着眼镜,和蔼可亲。那晚,他的身后,跟来一位看上去30多岁的尼姑央金拉(化名),顿珠拉说,央金是和自己一起从安多地区来的。

这晚,在青朴文则寺的小院里,漫天星光中,央金拉守在顿珠拉身旁一言不发。顿珠拉用流利的汉语和我朋友交谈着。我有些惊诧,我没想到这样偏远的地方,一位藏地出家人竟能把汉语说得那么好。

第二天一早,我们被邀请到寺院厨房喝茶。厨房的黑壁墙上,涂满了民间白色的吉祥图,暗红的土陶茶壶在火炉上飘散出酥油茶的浓香。五六位尼姑红扑扑的脸蛋像苹果,她们在为早间开法会的尼姑们煮糌粑粥。一面说笑着,背来叮叮咚咚的山泉水。

我好奇地向她们问起住持顿珠拉哪里学的汉语,尼姑央金拉为什么不说话……

从厨房出来,我闯进一排排尼姑宿舍中间——顿珠和央金的家。 和文则寺其他尼姑宿舍一样,顿珠和央金的家也是土坯和木头盖 的简易小屋。

我敲开门,拿着笔记本,莽撞地坐在僧人顿珠和尼姑央金中间。

房子狭长、窄小。除了两张藏式单人木床,没有任何家具。地上满是山里的尘土。锅碗瓢盆和一个烧煤油的小炉子、糌粑口袋等

凌乱地扔在靠窗的一角。从一扇破窗子里,钻进来的甲壳虫,在地上爬来爬去。

"您现在还爱央金拉吗?"一开口,我唐突地问。

盘坐在我对面卡垫上的顿珠拉,并不回避。他微笑着看看我,又望一眼沉默的央金。

窗外,野蔷薇树在摇曳,山雨就要来了,雅鲁藏布江闪着白光,像要把尘世和青朴分成两半。

顿珠拉拨着念珠,缓缓地说:"现在,我随时准备好了往生。只是央金,她跟我来青朴,我放心不下她……"

原来,在安多藏区的某个小村庄,顿珠和央金是邻居。四十出头的顿珠是村里的党支部副书记,他儿女成双,妻子贤惠。央金一家住在顿珠家隔壁,她沉默寡言,是三个孩子的母亲、村委会的会计。丈夫是村里的农民。

顿珠和央金两家,和睦为邻。两家的孩子也很要好。

顿珠懂藏、汉文,常教央金的孩子认字读书;央金做了好吃的面疙瘩汤,也要送半锅给顿珠一家。但一天,夜半月圆,顿珠和央金,从相互敬慕到暗恋,爱情在这个晚上像冲破了堤岸,终于越过了两家人相隔的墙。

央金泪流满面,她想,村里的小河,历经多少,才来到这个村庄,她和顿珠,也经历了生生世世缘分才走到一起,河水不会倒

流,他们的宿缘没有退路。

他们抛下孩子、家庭和婚姻,抛下一切,出走了——

但黑夜茫茫, 该去往哪里?

他们风餐露宿,去了印度、尼泊尔,朝拜了西藏所有的神山圣湖。一天,路仿佛到了尽头,他们到了青朴。

阳光像白银,微风像密语,山上,莲花生和益西措加密修的岩洞,像青朴的心窝。传说中,108个修行洞、108尊刻在岩壁石上的佛塔、108个天葬台、108个泉眼如梦......

顿珠和央金,再也没有离开过108颗念珠。

顿珠和央金在青朴岩洞,一住就是8年。

直到一位活佛重建文则寺,活佛请顿珠和央金管理小寺。文则寺,是尼姑院。

从此,顿珠腰上挂起一大串文则寺的钥匙。除了管理寺院,他要给尼姑们讲解佛经、教授藏文、主持寺里的法事……

那天,听着顿珠拉的讲述,我突然问: "尼姑央金拉,这些年, 您想念孩子吗?"

央金在禁语,不说话。听到我问她的孩子们,她怔住了。她停下 手里拨动的念珠,一脸恍惚。但她沉默着,对我摇头。望着她坚 毅的神色,我的泪水哗哗流淌,我仿佛感觉到她做母亲的心,曾 怎样痛过。

多年后,我再来到青朴,协助基金会送酥油、茶叶和日常药品。

那一路,黑夜像蜜一般醇厚,天蒙蒙亮时,我们到了。

路,这时已经修到青朴半山的文则寺。山上下来一位年轻的僧人清点我们捐赠的物资。中午一点,桑耶寺也会送来一批粮食,这位僧人对我们说,那时山上会下来十几位僧人,把物品扛上山,再通知每个山洞里的隐修者来领取。

我们却是租车来的。遥望青朴,司机当天要回。我想去看望顿珠和央金。

顺着文则寺旁的小路,我先去了寺里的厨房。厨房也扩建了,洒满了阳光。正用果绿色的搅拌机搅拌着酥油茶的尼姑,是新来的。她给我斟满茶,告诉我顿珠拉和央金拉还在青朴,在文则寺。

寺外的野蔷薇树长得更茂密了。有一栋两层小楼,红色的小门锁着,透过门缝,我看到院子里盛开着花,我猜那该是央金种的。门旁边的墙上,有一块小木板挡住窗口,我敲了敲,顿珠拉在!他拉开小木板,露出笑容。

"顿珠拉,你们好吗?"他的身后,我看到房子里摆放着彩色藏柜,床上铺着羊毛卡垫。液化炉旁,几个擦得锃亮的暖瓶闪着光。

"很好,谢谢。"

顿珠拉看起来胖了, 气色也很好。

"您还记得我吗?" 我问。

顿珠拉微笑着,好像忘了。

又聊了几句,我告辞了。刚走到一处看上去新装的自来水池旁, 我的心头突然一阵痛。

9年了。

远眺青朴山下,我的生活空无痕迹,身后,顿珠拉和央金拉在一起,9年来没有分离一天。

我擦干眼泪决定再返回去。

我敲开顿珠拉的小木窗。

"你是——"

顿珠拉怔怔地望着我, 他叫出了我的名字。

"这些年……你还好吗?"顿珠拉眼里透出沧桑。

我摇摇头。

但我丰衣足食, 我还缺什么吗?

我没见到央金拉。顿珠拉说,央金在楼上闭关,不能出来见面。

回去的路上,我回想着青朴,想顿珠拉和央金拉,——像青朴山上,一双突破红尘的箭。

Love Is a Pair of Unloosed Arrows

I first visited Chimpu with a friend one summer day nine years ago.

Chimpu is the name given to a Tibetan area about fifteen kilometers northeast of Samye Monastery, in the Lhokha region of Dranang County. When you reach the waist of Mount Yari at 4,300 meters elevation, that is Chimpu.

Legend has it that the Chim clan once lived on the mountain. The Lotus-Born, who founded the Nyingma School of Tibetan Buddhism, Tibet's first female tantric master Yeshe Tsogyel, the master Shantarakshita, the Tibetan king Trisong Detsen, and the tantric master Vairocana have all practiced at Chimpu: It is the most famous solitary retreat site in Tibet. If you take a boat from Samye onto the Yarlung Tsangpo River, the far shore is Chimpu.

The mountain awaited us with open arms, its bosom filled with blossoming rambler roses and other colorful mountain flowers.

Halfway up the mountain was a small hermitage called Wendza. It was already late, and the abbot, Dundrup (pseudonym), arranged for us to stay in one of its empty rooms.

Dundrup is a tall man, though slightly hunchbacked. He looks kind and approachable in his glasses. That night a nun who looked like she was in her 30s named Yangchen (pseudonym) was following him around. Dundrup told us that he and Yangchen had come together from Amdo.

That night, starlight filled the whole sky above the small courtyard of the hermitage. Dundrup was chatting with my friend in fluent Chinese, while Yangchen stood near him, silently watching. I was a bit surprised; I hadn't expected that a Tibetan monk from so remote a place could speak fluent Chinese.

Early the next morning, we were invited to have tea in the kitchen. The black walls of the kitchen were plastered with auspicious white folk symbols. The dark red clay teapots on the stove filled the room with the rich fragrance of butter tea. The five or six nuns who were preparing the tsampa porridge for the nuns' morning teachings all had faces as plump and red as apples. They laughed and chatted as they carried water from the babbling mountain spring.

I was curious, so I asked them where Abbot Dundrup had learned Chinese and why the nun Yangchen didn't speak at all...

I left the kitchen and barged into Dundrup and Yangchen's home, one of many among the rows and rows of residences for the nuns. Their humble hut was made of mud bricks and wood, just like the homes of the other nuns.

I knocked and opened the door. Notebook in hand, I sat obtrusively between Dundrup and Yangchen.

It was a narrow, small room with no other furniture than two Tibetan-style single beds made of wood. The floor was dusty. Pots, pans, utensils, a small stove, and bags of tsampa were piled in the corner by the window. A beetle crawled in through a broken pane.

"Do you still love Yangchen-la?" I asked abruptly.

Dundrup-la sat cross-legged on a cushion in front of me and did not avoid the question. Smiling at me, he looked at the silent Yangchen.

Outside the window, the ramblers and trees swayed gently. There would soon be rain on the mountain. The white waves of the Yarlung Tsangpo River glistened as though separating Chimpu from the world of dust.

Dundrup-la spoke slowly as he counted his rosary beads.

"At this point, I'm ready for the next life. It's just Yangchen that I worry about; she followed me to Chimpu..."

It turned out that Dundrup and Yangchen had been neighbors in a small village in Amdo. The forty-something Dundrup had been deputy party secretary in the village. He had a son, a daughter, and a virtuous wife. Yangchen's family lived next door. She was reticent, a mother of three, and the accountant for the village party committee. Her husband was a farmer in the village.

Dundrup and Yangchen's families were friendly—their children were especially close.

Dundrup spoke both Tibetan and Chinese and would often teach Yangchen's kids to read and write. Whenever Yangchen made her delicious noodle soup, she would send half to Dundrup's family.

But one night under a full moon Dundrup and Yangchen crossed from mutual adoration to a secret tryst, their love overflowing the wall separating their houses like water over a bank.

Yangchen's face was covered in tears. She thought, the river that runs through the village has flowed so far only to arrive here. In the same way, all of her and Dundrup's karma across many lifetimes had led to their coming together. Just as a river cannot flow backward, their relationship was fated and could not be reversed.

They left behind their children, families, and marriages. They let go of everything and left.

But the dark night is long—where could they go?

They roughed it, pilgrimaging to India, Nepal, and all the sacred lakes and mountains of Tibet. One day they arrived at Chimpu and somehow knew their road had come to an end.

The sun shone like silver and the breeze whispered its own secret language. On the mountain, the secret retreat cave of the Lotus-Born and Yeshe Tsogyal was the heart of Chimpu. Legend says it contains 108 meditation caves, 108 stupas carved into the cliffs, 108 sky-burial platforms, and 108 dreamlike springs...

Since they arrived, Dundrup and Yangchen have never parted from their rosaries, strung with 108 prayer beads.

They had lived in the Chimpu cave for eight years when a Living Buddha, called a tulku in Tibetan, started rebuilding the Wendza hermitage, and asked Dundrup and Yangchen to manage it. The hermitage had gradually become a nunnery.

Hanging from Dundrup's waist was a long stream of keys for the nunnery. In addition to managing the temple, Dundrup also taught the nuns Buddhist scripture, Tibetan language, and how to perform temple rituals.

That day, as Dundrup was telling their story, I suddenly asked, "Ani Yangchen-la, do you miss your children after all these years?"

Yangchen was taking a vow of silence that day. My question about her children startled her. She looked dazed and stopped fingering her prayer beads. But she shook her head in silence. The resolution in her expression made my tears begin to flow. I could almost feel the agony that her maternal heart must have experienced.

Many years later, I returned to Chimpu to help a charity deliver butter, tea, and medicine.

The darkness of the road was as thick as honey. We didn't arrive until dawn.

The road had been expanded and now reached all the way up the mountain to the hermitage. A young monk came down from the mountain and took inventory of the donations. At 1pm there would also be a food delivery from Samye, and the young monk told us that a dozen or so monks would come down to carry everything up the hill, and that they would notify everyone in the retreat caves to come and collect their share.

We just rented a car. I knew the driver needed to return that same day but looking at Chimpu, I wanted to check-in on Dundrup and Yangchen.

Following the small path through the hermitage, I stopped first at the kitchen. The kitchen too had been expanded and was filled with sunshine. I didn't recognize the nun making butter tea in an olivegreen blender; she must have been new. She said that Dundrup-la and Yangchen-la were still at the hermitage as she filled my teacup.

The rambler bushes in the fields outside the temple had grown even more lush. There was a modest two-story building with a little red door locked. Through the keyhole I could see flowers blossoming in the courtyard, probably Yangchen's work. I knocked on a small wooden Baimanazhen. Love Is a Pair Of Unused Arrows board covering the window. Dundrup-la appeared in the window! He pulled the plank aside and smiled.

"Dundrup-la, how are you?" I saw that behind him were colorful Tibetan-style cabinets. Wool blankets covered the bed, and a few polished thermoses stood next to the gas stove, glistening in the sunlight.

"Well, thank you."

Dundrup-la seemed to have put on some weight; he looked good.

"Do you still remember me?" I asked.

Dundrup-la smiled; it looked like he had forgotten.

We chatted for a little while, and I said goodbye. As I walked beside a newly dug reservoir, my heart abruptly started to ache.

It had been nine years.

Looking down Chimpu hill, I realized my empty life left no traces. Behind me, Dundrup-la and Yangchen-la had been together for nine years without separating for even a single day.

I wiped away my tears and decided to return.

I knocked again on Dundrup-la's board.

Yeshe: A Journal of Tibetan Literature, Art and Humanities, Special Issue, Vol. 5, No. 1, Sep 2025

"You are —"

Dundrup-la looked at me and recalled my name with a start.

"After all these years...are you still well?" I could see all the vicissitudes of life in Dundrup's eyes.

I shook my head. But I had enough to eat and clothes to wear, what else did I need?

I didn't get to see Yangchen-la. Dundrup-la told me that she was in solitary practice upstairs and couldn't come down to see me.

I thought of Chimpu on the way back. Dundrup-la and Yangchen-la were like a pair of arrows unloosed from the mountain that had pierced this mundane world of dust.

Works Cited

Lama, Tsering Yangzom. We Measure the Earth with Our Bodies. Bloomsbury Publishing, 2022.

Nordrun, Pema. Love in Lhasa. Yongue, James and Wan Jiahui, trans. 中译出版社, 2015.

Ryavec, Karl E. and Rocco N. Bowman. "Comparing Historical Tibetan Population Estimates with the Monks and Nuns: What was the Clerical Proportion?" Revue d'Études Tibétaines no. 61, 2021, pp. 209–231.

Baimanazhen. Love Is a Pair Of Unused Arrows

The Lottery (क्रुन्र विषादी)

Tenzin Dickie नमूत पदें त नने भ्रीन

(Translated from English by Dhondup T. Rekjong)

Abstract: "The Lottery" describes a historical event that transformed the fate of thousands of Tibetans in exile in the early 1990s. The story centers on the disorientation that accompanied the departure of the author's parents, who left the author and her brother in a Tibetan boarding school in India. It explores themes of displacement, emotional repression, cultural transition, and the awakening of existential awareness as understood through a child's inner world.

Keywords: displacement, memory, separation, childhood

Translator's Introduction

One of the major reasons why Tibetan Buddhism and culture hold an important place in global civilization is the tremendous translation of Indian Buddhism that Tibetans performed for centuries. Tibetans established their own translation dictionaries early on; one of the first bilingual lexicons is called sgra sbyor bam po gnyis pa (মুল্লিস্ক্রেম্বর্ট্রেম্বর্ট্রেস্ক্রেম্বর্ট্রেম্বর্ট্রেস্ক্রেম্বর্ট্রেম্বর্ট্রেস্ক্রেম্বর্ট্রেস্ক্রেম্বর্ট্রেম্বর্ট্রেস্ক্রেম্বর্ট্রেম্বর্ট্রেম্বর্ট্রেম্বর্ট্রেস্ক্রেম্বর্ট্রেম্ব well as making it accessible in the target language. This theory has been the beacon of Tibet's translation culture for thousands of years, still sustaining its relevance when translating something from a foreign language into Tibetan. This principle might appear simple, but it is difficult to fully embrace in practice, as I have tried to do here.

I enjoyed Tenzin Dickie's essay, which narrates an important historical event in exile through an individual's experience. This single event transformed the fate and future of thousands of Tibetans in exile in the early 1990s. Since I had the great joy of reading it in English first, I thought I should generate the feeling of that enjoyment in Tibetan, but that wasn't an easy task at all. The act of reading is different from the work of translating; the translation is inevitably different from the original.

In the process of translating this essay, my first challenge was translating the foreign fictional characters into Tibetan because, in my estimation, Tibetan language readers are not familiar with fictional characters such as Lady Bird, Cinderella, Snow White, Sleeping Beauty, or the Little Mermaid. If Tibetan readers do not have any sense of those characters, allusions to them mean nothing because they don't have any relevant memories or experience in their cultural and educational environment. Thus, when translating the fictional characters, I mostly translated their meanings and even kept the English names in parentheses.

Capturing irony was another major challenge. The question was how to produce the humoristic and sarcastic qualities in Tibetan that are seen in the original English. The writer's discussion of the gendered dimensions of the English mistranslation of the French word verre is hilarious. However, the nuance and subtlety of this humor attached to a technical word can't be captured in Tibetan, except by providing the context for Tibetan readers. Thus, I retained the words verre and vair in my Tibetan translation to keep their visual representation. Not only that, but there are layers of irony within the writer's own observation of westerners' delicate and distinctive smell, like decaying rose tissue, and their worldview of accepting kindness when they did not need it. I think I was successful at capturing these qualities; I am quite sure that Tibetan readers will burst into laughter when reading those parts. Having said that, one's own cultural sense, psychosocial view, and even linguistic utterance are the core of understanding humor. I think humor is best understood in its own culture.

After China's occupation of Tibet, the standardization of Tibetan language terms has been a major problem amongst Tibetan scholars and language experts, both in and outside Tibet. The question is often whose translation we should consider authentic and authoritative: the translation of new terms standardized inside Tibet under China or those used in exile under the Tibetan government. In both cases, the impossibility of standardizing Tibetan terms for the new foreign terms is inescapable. Foreign terms, such as PowerBalls and Thumbs Up don't have standardized Tibetan terms yet. I think this is not a challenge of translation for this particular essay so much as a national challenge going forward, as long as Tibetans do not have complete sovereignty over their own language.

These challenges are not necessarily only true when translating from English to Tibetan or other languages; when translating from Tibetan to English, we might face the same kind of problems. My final observation is that a translation is neither the original work nor a replication of it. A translation is only a translation, nothing else.

The Lottery

We called it the lottery. The lottery to go to America. It was a list of a thousand names. How did the Tibetan government officials decide who got on this list? Did they fold thousands of names into thousands of tiny rolls of paper, mix them up for good measure, and pick out a thousand lucky winners?

Before the lottery, the only lotteries we knew about were school raffles which my brother Tendor had a knack for winning. His luck held through several years of raffle drawings before it vanished abruptly and he stopped winning. One of the last things he won was a pair of beautiful black ankle high leather boots that all the female teachers had their eyes on. Later they came to our apartment to try them on—the black leather boots with small heels—elegant, comfortable, enduring. The leather was soft and flexible, and the zip smooth and seamless. The shoes must have been Italian. Back then even if you had the money for such luxurious items, which of course none of the teachers had, you couldn't have found shoes like that anywhere in India, even in bazaars in Delhi. One by one, each woman tried to slip a bare foot into a shoe and one by one, each gave up in resignation—the toes were too narrow, the arch too high, the ankle too tight. The shoes would not fit anyone. "Cinderella's shoes," my mother said.

I knew all about Cinderella and her shoes from the Ladybird books that my mother brought me from the school library. I knew about Snow White too and Sleeping Beauty and the Little Mermaid—beauties with skin as white as snow and hair as black as ebony or yellow as silk or red as sunset. None of these princesses looked anything like any of the women I knew. My mother put the shoes away. We'll keep them for you when you grow up, she promised. I arched my feet and smiled with secret delight. I was eight. I had years to grow into my Cinderella shoes but I knew that when I did they would fit. They fitted no one else but they would fit me. I know now that in the original French fairytale, Cinderella's shoes weren't glass at all but fur. The translator mistook the word 'vair' for 'verre' and transformed fur to glass—the translator must have been a man, a woman would know that glass shoes are for looking at and not for wearing. Still, this blunder rectified a detail, transforming the shoes from ordinary fur to transcendent glass. Fur after all can be stretched, while glass shoes must be made just for you. Different objects have different symbolic value. Imagine Eve or Snow White biting into a mango. It just doesn't work.

So those were the lotteries we knew, school raffles in which the most you won was a teddy bear or a pair of shoes that fit no one. Lotteries such as my friend Sonam buys now, the PowerBalls with tens of millions of dollars for the winner, and the Scratch tickets that my mother likes to buy and scratch out, the meager winnings always slightly less than the initial outlay, these were unknown then in India. Shows such as Kon Banega Crorepati, the Indian version of Who Wants to Become a Millionaire (a crore being ten million rupees), were unthinkable. India was still recovering from the economic slumber of its Socialist Nehru years, its markets opening slowly with hairline cracks to the world. Coca-Cola, which you could find all over Kathmandu, had yet to come to India. On the rare occasions that we could afford soft drinks, we drank the local imitation Thumbs Up and wondered how it measured against the original. India was poor and Tibetans poorer still. The idea of a lottery that made you rich, a lottery that gave you a new life, was not just ridiculous but subversive.

And then it came. The lottery to America, the lottery that split our future. We were refugees. We lived in exile in small Tibetan villages dotted across India. We knew our future—we would have our parents' refugee lives, our parents' exile futures. We would grow up, graduate from our Tibetan boarding schools, go off to Indian colleges in the great subcontinental cities of the heartland (Chandigarh, Delhi, Bangalore), make friends with Indians but not too well because it wasn't for us to make love or war with them, and then return to our Tibetan settlements in the north or south to work in our own schools and communities, our own government. With America came the possibility of living outside these settlements, the possibility of unsettling. With America, the future split infinitely.

America. Chigyal. Outside Country. Abroad. Nubchok. The West. The west was a composite, the land of the yellow-haired, blue-eyed Injis. We were inordinately curious about them, that mysterious charmed species that stepped through India so lightly, smiling at complete strangers and taking their photos. We couldn't help but be infected by some of the obsequious reverence the Indians had for these Injis, so lately their overlords. The confidence with which they acted like people for whom things went right all the time was awe-inspiring for us, a people for whom things had gone so wrong. They were a people who had a place not just in their own world but every other world they chose to enter, whereas we had no place anywhere, not even in our own world. Whether the Injis came from England, America, Germany, or France made no difference to us. They were Injis with their yellow hair and colorless eyebrows, skin pale pink like that of baby mice. They had a smell too, not rancid like the Indian smell but rather delicate and distinctive, something faintly sweet, like decaying rose tissue. It was not an unpleasant smell.

There were very specific things I knew about Injis. I knew they were a proud people who could accept kindness only when they did not need it. We had had two Inji guests at a special school dinner once. Before the dinner our principal made an announcement to the entire school: one of the two Injis was blind but not one of the teachers or the students was to help him because he would be insulted and offended. What a proud and narrow-minded people, we thought, who would take kindness for contempt. But we knew they could be kind. Machen Phuntsok, the cook and the only person at Patlikuhl who had travelled abroad, insisted on their kindness. In fact, he hadn't travelled so much as he was shipped abroad, with a cardboard notice hanging around his neck with his destination written in a foreign hand, while helpful yellow-haired strangers bore him along through different airports to the correct arrivals gate in Switzerland where he was joyfully retrieved by his relatives.

Another time a group of Inji tourists stopped by the school on their way to Manali. They had these strange cameras slung around their necks. They took a few photos on the playground and handed out these photos, right then and there, to the overjoyed subjects. Of course they got mobbed. They spent the rest of the afternoon taking portrait pictures of us one by one. I jostled my way into the line. I had been in family pictures before, but never in a photo just by myself. For many of my schoolmates, it was their first photo of themselves. After I had my picture taken, I held the square grey-white sheet of paper by its tip, watching the grey-white fog color into an image of myself. I looked startled, as if I had been there all along and I was only now noticing it.

For all that the lottery changed my life, I don't remember how I heard about it. Did I hear it from my parents? The other staff children? One week the conversations in the staff room were about the new Hindi movie in the cinema and the love affair between Miss A and Gen BC and the next they were all about America. Who wanted to go, who did not want to go but was going to sign up anyway because regret always came too late, who would survive, who would have to learn English, who thought they would be unhappy but what was there in Patlikuhl for them anyway, with a pay that was just enough to last from month to month with nothing saved towards your future, your children's future.

Years later I would learn the specifics. It was Representative Barney Frank, a Democrat from Massachusetts, who introduced the Tibetan provisions to the 1990 Immigration Act to allow one thousand Tibetans entry into the country. For fear of Chinese displeasure, the American government would not give either refugee or immigrant status to Tibetans, but Congress had finally settled on a compromise: Tibetans would be recognized as 'displaced' rather than 'refugees' and given 1,000 immigrant visas. Then all we knew was that the American government had said to our government, we'll take one thousand of your people.

An expanded version of this essay appears in The Penguin Book of Modern Tibetan Essays (2023).

ক্রুবংর্পিশানা

 म्बर्ग्न्य स्थानि स्था

रश्राक्षात्राचन्त्राचेशः क्षेत्राच्देर् न्द्रोश्याद्देन् त्रश्राद्योहरार्धेन् न्द्रदे सुन् सेन् नुहुत् स (Lady Bird) 'भै'नेन'पिन्'नक्कुन'त्रस्य' सेत्'ङ्चेत्रस्य'स्य' (Cinderella) न्दःसेंदेः ॱॿॣॺॱख़ॱख़॔ॸॱॺॊॱऄॣॕॸॱऄॄॺॱॻॖऀॱऄ॔ॸऻॗ ॸॺॱॺऻॸॺॱॸॄग़ऻॸॱॿॣॱऄ॔ॱ (Snow White) ॸ॔ॸॱॺऻड़ऀॸ॔ॱ र्नेर सहें अ'स (Sleeping Beauty)। युदि तु से रहर कुर (Little Mermaid) ॲ्याश.बशश.२८.७१४.ग्री.लूरी प्रिट.क्षुपु.यारश.क्षेत्र.रेयात्राधुर.४६श.सपु.भ्री.क्षेयाशी क्ये. 'એન્ડવન'ર્સ.કે.વેલુ.ક્ષે.લૂં! ટેમ.સૂંશન્કે.વેલુ.ક્ષે.જુમી છું.જા.કે.વેલુ.ક્ષે.ટેજમ.જૂનોજો ફિન્ટ क्रॅं महिमाग्रहार रुपेश रावे सुन सेन क्रें नाम महमान स्थाप रहा में सामेन लॅशानु केराक्याया येथा लासपु योशिरमारूया ब्रिटी तक्ष्र पूरमा वैराय मूर्तिसा ने ब्रिय बेस्। द्वेःस्टावीःहेरागाः अर्वेवायाः उत्याद्यादाद्वययाः क्रेंद्राउत्याद्यया। देःदुयादार्यादा नकुर्-डसप्पेत्र। शेद-श्रेश-देश-प्राप्ते-ध्रुस-कुर-र-उ-र्दि-रिप्यश-श्रुव-र्वेश। देव-ग्रमा ने र्में वर्षे पुरा कें पुरा कें प्राप्त का सुरा ने मालवर શે.જાતાર.બૂંટ.યુ.૧૪.કુટી ટ.જા.બૂંટ.યુ.કુટ.યજાજારૂટા ટ.કો.૮૪.બુજા.જી્ટ.જા કૂર્યા. धेव'सर'र्गे'नश'नर्डेश'न'रेट्। देव'ग्रुट'। धेवा'नङ्कुर'न'ट्रेश' ब'खूट्' vair हे' verre यहेश्यक्राम्यान्त्रेत्वात्यायञ्च वित्राच्यात्रेत् वित्राच्यात्रेत्यात्रेत्रा

यद्भः स्वा क्षित्र व स्वे व क्षित्र क्षे स्व क्

यर हिरा पर्ने रचा वे र के अपन ૡ૽ૼૼૼૼૼૼૼૼૼૼૼૼૼૼૼૼૼઌૢૻ૽૽ૼૢૼૡૻ૽૽ૼ૱ૡ૽ૼૼૹઌ૽૱૾ૺૹઌૢ૿૽ૼ૱ૢૢૢૢૢૼઌ૽૽ૡ૽૽ઌ૽૽૱ૹૢઌ૽૽૽ૡ૽ૹ૽૽૾૽ૡ૽ૼ૱ नवे खूब क नाडेना थू नु रेन् देरे में नु स्थे में नु स्थान स् झेट.सेच. (bowerBalls) क्षे.ये.क्षे.क्चेत्राच.क्च्य.थ.क्ष.क्चेंट्र.४.ल.चङ्कःब्रेचा.क्च्य.चंद्र.ट्र. नःऍन्ॱसदेःनेष्रभःन्नः असः तः स्वैः अः अः अष्यश्चे अःर्हे : नवितः सदेः अषाः प्रदेनः क्रुत्रः विषाः सर-क्रि.वार-श्र्वायावयाक्ष्यः स्त्रीया क्रि.वार-क्रि.वहेयः तह्रीयः तायाः रहेशः रे Kon Banega Crorepati क्ष.तु.क्षे. शु.भ.प्यदे.चन्वार्से.ळवाश.वर्नेन्.नस.चेन्.च.क्ष.तु.दे.नेवाश.दे. नर्भात्रास्त्राच्यात्राच्यात्राच्यात्रेत्। भूनर्भात्रेत्त्वः स्त्रीत्रे स्त्रीत्रीत्रे स्त्रीत्रीत्रे स्त्रीत्रे स्त्रीत्रे स्त्रीत्रे स्त्रीत्रे स्त्रीते स्त्रीत्रीत्रे स्त्रीत्रीत्रे स्त्रीत्रे स्त्रीत्रे स्तिते स्त्रीत्रीत्रे स्त्रीत्रे स्त्रीते स्त्रीते स्त्रीते स्त्रीत्रीत्रे स्तिते स्त्रीते स्त्रीते स्त्रीते स्त्रीते स्त्रीते स्त्रीते स्त्रीते स्त्रीते स्त्रीते स्तिते स्त्रीते स्त्रीते स्त्रीते स्त्रीते स्तिते स्त्रीते स्तिते स्तिते स्त्रीते स्तिते स् ॸॹॎढ़ऄॖ॔ॸॱड़ढ़ॱॿॖऀॱढ़॓ॱॸॕढ़ऀॱॸॖॣॺॱक़ॕॸॱढ़ॺॱॷॣॸॱॻऻऄ॔ॱॲ॔ॸॱॸढ़ऻढ़ॱॲ॔ॸॱड़॓ॸॱॸॺख़ढ़ऄॖ॔ॸॱॿॖऀॱ  ફ્રિંસન્સન્યાના સત્તર્સા શૈન્યના શ્રુન્કો. મુંત્રુની તતા. ભેલા છે. ક્ષેત્ર, જાતુ. ચોન્ય જાત્રુન ક્ષેત્રેના ક્ષેત્રેના ક્ષેત્રના ક सदः वर्धरः क्रि. वि. वर्षाः क्षे. वि. यारा कार्यः यारा यारा देश स्त्रेय या यो स्त्रीय यारा यारा स्त्रीय यारा य यर नशेयातु त्रवुर नते में भूनश र्ये र हेर र र्केशश न्त्रवश र्योः Thumbs Up सू तु त्बिर.बुर.दे.तबर.के.रू.स.र्र. हे.केर.वर्सर.र्यू श.यद.भूर.ज.यश्वराष्ट्रीं र्वेहर.बुर। मी यार वे र्श्वे कर र त्रुव र्यो के त्या में दा के इस सा वे र र तुर प्यार र तुव र में वी कुर के वा नेशाह्नेन्द्रान्त्र्वार्यः नर्वेन्यवयः धराव्यात्र्यः स्वर्ते । व्यायाः स्वर्ते । व्यायाः स्वर्ते । व्यायाः स्व विश्वराष्ट्रीत्रां नित्रां स्वर्ते । व्यायाः स्वरंति । व्यायाः स्वरंति । व्यायाः स्वरंति । व्यायाः स्वरंति । व

क्रैरम्भ्वेच सम्युक्तिय्दी ववीर्यविम्यान्त्री चाष्ट्रम्यान्त्रम्यान्त्रम्य्याः विम्यान्त्रम्यान्त्रम्यान्त्रम्य विद्यान्त्रम्यान्त्रम्य विद्यान्त्रम्य विद्यान्य विद्यान्त्रम्य विद्यान्त्य विद्यान्त्रम्य विद्यान्त्रम्य विद्यान्त्रम्य विद्यान्त्रम्य विद्य विद्यान्त्रम्य विद्यान्त्रम्य विद्यान्त्रम्य विद्यान्त्रम्य विद्यान्त्रम्य विद्यान्त्रम्य विद्यान्त्य विद्यान्त्य विद्यान्य विद्यान्त्य विद्यान्त्य विद्यान्य विद्यान्त्य विद्यान्त्य विद्यान्य विद्यान्त्य विद्यान्य विद्यान्त्य विद्यान्य विद्य

ल्यानी क्षेत्र क्षेत्

यवुष्ट्र-अन्त्राविष्ट्र-विन्त्राची विन्न्याक्ष्ट्रन्।

यवुष्ट्र-अन्त्राविष्ट्र-विन्न्याविष्ट्याविष्याविष्ट्याविष्याविष्याविष्याविष्ट्याविष्ट्याविष्याविष्याविष्याविष्याविष्याविष्यावि

स्ट्रिं त्रिन्या विराद्धेत्र स्वार्म्य स्वर्म्य स्वर्य स्वर्म्य स्वर्म्य स्वर्य स्वर्म्य स्वर्य स्वर

यार्ट्स्यर्सिद्देशस्य प्रवित्त्वर्याव्य स्वेत्रः वित्र स्वेत्रः स्वेतः स्वेत्रः स्वेत्रः स्वेत्रः स्वेतः स्वे

नड्न र्ज्ञियार्निन्यालुन्यान्य र्क्स्यार्नेन् स्री स्वियार्स्रेन्य खान्यान्य वित्र वी स्थित वेस्य निर्मेन्

Somewhere Else (ম'ক্ত'না'নী'র্মিন্।)

Tsering Wangmo Dhompa จุ๊สเราซิวิรารุกราสัง (Translated from English by Dhondup T. Rekjong)

Abstract: "Somewhere Else" is a reflective poem that evokes exile, memory, and historical trauma through the lens of a refugee's spiritual and emotional journey. It depicts exile as not only one's physical dislocation but also a psychological and spiritual condition passed from one generation to the next.

Keywords: Refugee, exile, trauma, poetry, buddhism

Translator's Introduction

In Lama Jabb's brilliant talk on translation, "An Act of Bardo: Translating Tibetan Poetry" (2018, 2024), he argues that "like a journey through the bardo realm, translation is full of pitfalls and enlightening opportunities." On the one hand, "something of the originals remains uncaptured in translations." On the other hand, Lama Jabb encourages translators to toil in our task until we gain enlightenment. In the process of translating Dhompa's poem, I felt the existence of bardo. From the outset, I was trying to share one possible version of her poem with Tibetan readers, rather than trying to capture the original and complete feel of the poem engrained in English.

Translation is not simple and linear; it is a complex process and a delicate task to perform. Like bardo, translation is a sort of intermediate conversation between the original text, the translator, the writer and the reader. I felt that I was part of that conversation when translating Dhompa's beautiful yet historically tragic poem. The word "refuge" is the center of the poem, not just the word, but its historical formation and burden, in which words like "patience," "prayer," "sacrifice" and "hope" are imprisoned. It also provides us a glimpse of the repressive history that led to her becoming a refugee and the future that it hopes for, to be legitimized on foreign soil. Hope and patience are the only qualities that a refugee can claim.

In the process of translating this poem, I have tried to touch upon three major elements: voice, economy of language, and the multiplicity of perspectives. Translating the poem's use of voice into Tibetan is very difficult because there are several: "her" voice, her uncle's voice, and the poet's own voice. Each of these voices has its own historical anecdote and significance. For example, her voice is the memory of history as well as a historical beacon that guides the poet from time to time. Also, the uncle's voice suggests a force that reminds the poet to keep the historical memories intact. The poet's voice narrates others' voices, situating them where they fit best in terms of historical significance and positionality. Also, the tone or mood that each voice evokes is another difficult domain to deliver in Tibetan, because the poet uses alliteration, repetition, and internal rhymes within certain lines to produce specific emotional effects.

Even I can feel their voices through the textual community of the poem; I think their voices in English are not equal to their voices in Tibetan. I think the poetic effect, tone, and mood should be felt and experienced in English, rather than in Tibetan. Despite the significance of their voices in English, it is entirely fair to say that my translation is only the translation of their voices rather than the originality of them.

Economy of language was another major challenge when translating this poem. In most cases, I was not able to keep the same length: each line in Tibetan is a little longer than the English version. Maybe I was unable to be perfect in my diction while focusing on the meaning. I tried to capture the meaning of each line for the Tibetan readers, rather than maintaining the length. However, in some cases, I think I was able to do better than the original English. For example, the pot metaphors can be better captured in Tibetan because we already have standardized terms. Just the names of those terms in Tibetan are more than enough to capture the precise meaning because they commonly pass the lips of Tibetans.

Perspective was another challenge because there are some slightly abrupt shifts in the narrative time and between historical events and figures. The story is not linear; rather, it is woven through the history and memories of different individuals related to the poet. Having said that, of course they all have something to contribute to the history of refugees to some extent. I was able to capture the perspectives of the poem because I am also familiar with that particular history which I myself have experienced.

The challenges that I have described could be understood as opportunities, as Lama Jabb stresses in his talk. With that in my mind, I would say that my translation is primarily a translation of the meaning of Dhompa's excellent poem. Rather than reading poems in Tibetan and English, if I am a poet in both, there might be better opportunities for me to capture the rhythm, the form, and even the effect of the poem in Tibetan.

Somewhere Else

Remembering her, I draw the net away from the future's dry riverbank.

Remembering, not losing myself to the words, nor ignoring words, their order, the meaning.

Persevere, she would say, even if the words don't reach you. If the story is too difficult, do not be disheartened. Give equal attention to a simple word as you would a complex theory.

Pouring water on an upside-down pot will drench the pot but you'll remain thirsty.

Pouring water into a pot with a hole will be like listening to a story in a language where you know only five words. Pouring water into a pot that has poison in it will turn medicine into a knife.

The attitude with which you listen is important.

I hear her voice in the Words of my Perfect Teacher.

It is, as she was, talking about a spiritual journey.

Story is remembered with levels: what is heard, what is meant to be heard (indirectly), and the meaning. If you mix up the order with each telling, the story will be different, and the levels will change.

If you alter details, the meaning will shift. Do not reorder my story, uncle said. He did not want me to paint the walls of his prison cell. No bait to get to meaning. Remember everything, he said, the words, the meaning, and the sequence of events.

She pulverized rocks to build a road for her host nation in exchange for a ticket to the future: a refugee-citizen, a citizenship to come at whose center a demoness was pinned to the ground.

The leaders of the future nation said:

- 1. Practice patience.
- 2. Pray.
- 3. The rules that govern the house you build today may not apply tomorrow.
- 4. You are a product of actions that predate your memory.
- 5. Sacrifice.
- 6. Hope is crucial. Do not trust hope to alter your karma.
- 7. Hope.

She survived survival in a substitute heart, hers hung elsewhere.

The category of refugee demands evidence of dispossession. Scars of war are recorded in a different column. We remember, life is suffering.

That's also when the lama points to karma: everything fades except the effect of actions. A seed no bigger than a sesame grain grows into a tree.

This is also true of negative actions. She believed that above all laws that govern us, whom no law protects, is karma. The life of karma is outside the knowledge of remembered life.

Karma of self, of people, of land, of history, and so on.

She believed that justice would correct her mother's jump to death. The river that had helped her live, accepted her to drown.

As a citizen I carry documents to verify I am who I am not.

When I say I was a refugee the audience conjures a narrative from which I emerge a plucky winner who has proved their worthiness.

Then, I am equal to a concept of human, because of their humanity.

When I was a refugee, I apologized for the lime stains on guests whose spines leaned against the walls in our home. I blamed myself for the unpreparedness to pick an option, between A and B on entry and exit forms.

When I am a refugee, I work hard to prove I am exceptional to ordinary people. I fight desire for something as ordinary as having a team to root for.

Everything that blooms is the last time. The last marigold, the last new baby. Confident about returning, we turn homecoming into a ritual.

The embarrassment of uncertainty follows us through new streets festooned with trees, that for years were pictures of how others lived.

Now we enter doors that were symbols.

The walls are left white, in case we must leave.

The category of refugee comes with benefits, they say, so you fulfill their expectations. Knowledge of, acceptance of, analyses of losses don't change how you feel.

You begin to worry you have not suffered enough. If only you had scars where your bones were broken for a convincing narrative.

Your mother was shot by the Chinese.

Your sisters spent their youth in labor camps.

As one who came after, you memorize the names of the dead to legitimize the self or perhaps it is about suffering I am attempting to write here.

The state of refugee is the state nobody wants to conquer. You are there;

we cannot leave.

Before I understood your suffering as having no end, I thought imagination would color over facts. Time heals all wounds, I said offering you language from school.

In exile, you crack peanuts between thumb and index fingers. It is also the way I write, being the one who came after.

Imagine, you are in the waiting room with an open wound and a ticket with your name on it.

You practice patience. The best you can do is hope.

Year after year you wait for your name to be called.

The blister called hope,

burns before it peels off.

याकायाची स्म

र्विः सॅं : इत् : नविद्या र सः प्रश्नुरः प्रश्नुरः श्रीः वार्डरः सेविः र नः वार्वसः सः श्रुः श्रुः स्वेता

इवःमा ८४१-४८ क्रिनःक्षेताः वार्ये राजवसाक्षेत्राः निर्देशे विष्टिस्या वर्षः हितः वर्षः वार्यः स्थितः स्थितः व

र्बूर्पायः ब्रुवश्यः विवायः कुः ब्रुवाश्यः व्यव्यायः ने क्विंत्रयः चेत्र व्यव्यायः चेत्रः व्यव्यायः विवायः व्य

ब्रूॅन्'ब्नक्स`ह्रॅब्य'बेवा'व्य'कु'ध्रुवा'च'वे'क्ठेवा'म्नर'रे'वाहेश्य'स'वाहेंवाश्यसे'वें('नवे'वाहस'क्रुन्' बेवा'व्य'ह्रव्य'य'न्द्र'स्यह्रंद्रश्र

र्ब्रून् भ्रे मार्डर न विमाया कु त्रुमाया त ने प्रेयायत मार्वेन यर न श्रुमा

गुर्दार्श्चेर हे विवायहिर दश्यक्तर विवादिर ही ।

गुद्र-चन्नरःङ्गः अदे विषाखुर-दुः रश्चार्वे अदिः भूदः रगार्वे

नेवी स्र-निवनिर्धिस्न-निर्धेसन्निर्धेसन्नित्स्य

योथ्यः क्चिट्रं योक्षः योद्धः त्यादेवे विक्षः स्था विक्षः स्या विक्षः स्था विक्षः स्या विक्षः स्था विक्षः स्या विक्षः स्था विक्षः स्था विक्षः स्था विक्षः स्था विक्षः स्था वि

विः र्श्वे स्वान्तः त्रे दे श्वेदः र्श्वः विवाः व्यः त्रवे स्वयः व्यवे स्वयः व्यः विवाः विवाः

त्वीर.पवीर.मी.मिजाविय.रेषु.पत्री.पत्रीर.मश्तरामीश.यर्ह्र.र्र्यी

- १) नर्बेर्-र्स्स्र्याम्बर्दिरः।
- ব) বার্থুরে:বার্রুবমা
- २) ने स्ट्रिन् ग्रेश न श्रुव संदे ।वट सं ने स्त्र न्या न श्रुव संदे श्रुव वि स्थाय स्त्र होता स्व
-) ब्रिंन्'वे'ब्रिंन्'ग्रे'न्व, संदे'क्ंन्स्य, नृंच्य, नृंचे'संदेव, संदेव, संद
- ५) र्ह्मेश्रामिहरा
- ८) रे.च.वे.चावाक्री रे.च.वार्डिन् ग्री.वयग्निन्दावार्या वश्चर वर्षे वर्ये वर्षे वर्य

ع) كرام

र्तिः र्रेश्वः श्रीदः स्वतः देवसः प्यदः वर्ते शः श्रेष्ट्रिया सः श्रीः हिंद्। यात्रसः मानवः विवाः तः वर्ते श्रेष्ट्। यात्रसः श्रीदः स्वतः विवाः तः वर्ते श्रीदः स्वतः वर्षे व

यक्तान्त्र्।

प्रमात्वर्याक्षाम् वर्षाक्ष्यः मुद्रम् । स्वर्णाः स्वर

য়য়য়৽ঽয়য়৽য়য়৽য়য়৽য়৽য়৽য়৾য়ৢয়৽য়৻ৼৢয়ৢয়৽য়য়৽ৼৢৢঀ য়য়য়৽ড়য়৽য়য়৽য়য়৽য়য়৽য়৽য়৽য়য়ৣয়৽য়৻য়ৢয়৽য়ঢ়ৢ৽য়য়৽য়ৢঢ়৽য়য়৽য়ৢঢ়য়৽য়ঢ়ৢঢ়য়য়৽য় য়য়য়৽ড়য়৽য়য়৽য়য়৽য়য়৽য়৽য়৽য়৽য়ড়ৢয়ৢয়৽য়৻য়ৢ৽য়য়৽য়ঢ়ৢঢ়য়য়৽য়ঢ়ৢঢ়য়য়৽য়

क्षे.यी के.यी

योथ्यः क्रीट. त्रंत्रा ट. वु. श्रुट. श्रूच श. ठव. क्री. क्रीया त्रंत्राया त्राये श्रीत्राय होता हो. व्रिट. क्रु इ. श्रुट. तर व्याया व्याय

देवशा र ते वर्षे न से विवादर विवासहर मही विर है ने तर्मे न मुर हैन।

दःश्चित्रयात्रक्ष्यात्रः ध्रेत्राच्या द्रश्यात्रयात्र ह्यात्र्यात्र स्वयात्र ह्यात्र स्वयात्र ह्यात्र स्वयात्र दः सःश्चेत्र प्रति स्वयात्र स्वयात्र ह्यात्र स्वयात्र स्

ळंटः सर-नग्रम् मार्थः स्वाप्तः स्वाप्तः स्वाप्तः स्वाप्तः स्वाप्तः स्वाप्तः स्वाप्तः स्वाप्तः स्वाप्तः स्वाप्त

য়য়ঀয়ঀ৾৻ঀৢয়৻য় ঀৢয়৻য়ঀ৾৻ঀৢয়৻য়য়৻য়ঢ়৾ঢ়৻য়ৢৼ৻ড়৾ৼ৻য়ৢৼ৻৸ৼ৻য়ৢয়৻ঀৢয়৻য়য়ঢ়৻য়ৢয়৻য়৻য়য়য়ৢয়৻

दर्मा है स्टान्स्य क्षेत्र स्टान्स्य क्षेत्र स्टान्स्य स्टान्स्य

८ त्री १ त्र्यां मृत्या कर्ण कर्ण क्षा क्षेत्र प्रते स्वित्र प्रत्य प्रत्य । वर्ष्ट्र वाक्ष ग्राहर म्हा क्षेत्र क्षेत्र क्षेत्र प्रते स्वित्र क्षेत्र क्षेत्र क्षेत्र क्षेत्र क्षेत्र क्षेत्

ট্রিন্'গ্রী'জ'ম'ক্কু'অম'নমন্

हिंद्राग्री अपने स्थेश महिंद्र मदे यह कें नहेंद्र दु न क्रुया

श्चिन्यः वर्षेत्रः वर्षः विष्यः विषयः विषय

पार्शा वहें ते श्रूपा वर्षण त्या हैं पार्था समय स्थान स्थान

नड्न र्चियात्। विन् ग्रीकार्यस्यो । स्ट्राहेकाकुर् क्षेत्रायां स्वाधिकार्थिका विक्रास्त्र स्वाधिकार्थिकार्थिका क्रियायचे प्रतिक्रियायकी । स्ट्राहेकाकुर्क्षेकावाधिकायका

हिंद्-ग्रिश-स्ट-वी-त्यवा-हु-श्रॅ-श्रेदिःश्रेद-र्ह्मवाश-सदि-श्च-श्रे-त्वीवा-वर्ह्ण-विवा-वर्ह्ण-विव्-वस-श्चुवा-वर्षेद्र-य-त्य-र्ह्हेन्-द्यवा-हिंश-द्या

ब्रिंत्र ग्रीश नर्बेत्र क्षेत्र ग्रीत्र । ब्रिंत्र ग्रीश नात्र त्र स्तु ना न्रीत्र क्षु ने क्षेत्र ग्रीत्र । वित्र ग्रीश स्तर में क्षु ने क्षेत्र स्त्र स्तु ना न्रीत्र ।

रे.भ्रेंग.धु.ध.धर.के.धर्।

दे'स'नईस'र्थेद'स'द'त्तुमामहिंदा

Works Cited

- Jabb, Lama. "An Act of Bardo: Translating Tibetan Poetry." Lotsawa Translation Workshop 6 Oct 2018, The University of Colorado-Boulder, Boulder, USA.
- —. "An Act of Bardo: Translating Tibetan Poetry." In Longing to Awaken: Buddhist Devotion in Tibetan Poetry and Song, Edited by Holly Gayley and Dominique Townsend, 32-52. University of Virginia Press, 2024.

About the Authors

Baimanazhen (白玛娜珍 河東河南美河) is a Tibetan writer. She is based in Lhasa and writes primarily in Chinese. Her work explores the role of spirituality in the lives of contemporary Tibetan women as they face various socio-political challenges.

Chimé (এই মিন্) is a famed contemporary poet and Tibetan language teacher from Rebgong, Amdo. She has published two books of collected poems, Dreams of the Moon (ক্লুনেইইন্মান্) and The Youth of Water (ক্লুনেইই) in 2012 and 2016 respectively. A third book of poetry and essays, The World in a Copper Mirror (রহমান্ট্রামানেইব্রামান্ট্রামানেইব্রামান্ট্রামানেইব্রামান্ট্রামানেইব্রামান্ট্রামানেইবর্মানেইব্রামানেইবর্মানেইব্রামানেইবর্ম

Kelsang Lhamo (১৯০১ নাই ১৯৯১) was born in Lhokha, south of Lhasa in Tibet. She received teachings on Tibetan medicine and on the Five Minor Sciences from Sheldrak Khen Rinpoche and Dungkar Losang Trinlé. She traveled to India in 1989, where she received novice vows from His Holiness the 14th Dalai Lama and received Buddhist teachings from Geshe Drubthob Rinpoche and other masters for ten years. She also studied Hindi and the Vedas in Varanasi. Kelsang moved to the U.S. in 1999 and translated Sogyal Rinpoche's The Tibetan Book of Living and Dying into Tibetan with Ringu Tulku. In 2003, with the kind support of Alak Zenkar Rinpoche and Tashi Tsering Josayma, Kelsang joined the Buddhist Digital Resource Center (BDRC). Under the guidance of Gene Smith, the founder of BDRC, she continued her study of Tibetan literature. Kelsang has taught Tibetan language and literature and currently works as senior librarian at BDRC. Her writings and translations include Dreaming at the Sage's Abode: Biographical Sketches of Four Living Tibetan Nuns, Biography of Great Kalayanmitra Geshe Yeshe Topden, Collection of Contemporary Writings of Tibetan Women, and A Maiden's Wandering Westward.

Nyima Tso/ Mutik (ইন্ট্রেম্র্রের্ড্রেম্র্রের্ড্

Marriage Policy" (Tibetan Women's Association, 2013). To date she has translated forty-four children's books from English to Tibetan. She is editor of Mayum, a quarterly publication with articles written in-Tibetan-by-Tibetan women writers. She also works as a Production Manager at Norbulingka Institute and serves as Executive Secretary for Tibetan Writers Abroad PEN Centre (PEN TIBET).

Tenzin Dickie (সমূর্ মেইর্ মেই মুন্) is a poet, writer, and translator. She is the editor of Old Demons, New Deities: Twenty-One Short Stories from Tibet (2017), and The Penguin Book of Modern Tibetan Essays (2023). Her works are available for purchase here.

Tsering Wangmo Dhompa (ﷺ ५५५६ ६५६ (2011), is the author of the poetry books My Rice Tastes like the Lake (2011), In the Absent of Everyday (2005), and Rules of the House (2002), all from Apogee Press, Berkeley, and three chapbooks. Dhompa's first non-fiction book, Coming Home to Tibet, was published by Penguin India in 2014 and in the US by Shambhala Publications in 2016. Dhompa teaches in the English Department at Villanova University.

About the Translators

Erin Burke is a PhD candidate in the Department of Religious Studies at the University of Virginia. Her dissertation entitled Writing Selves, Writing Worlds: Tibetan Buddhism and the Popular Religious Imaginaire in Modern Tibetan Fiction examines the continuities and innovations pertaining to religious thought in Tibetan creative literature published since 1980.

David Germano is a professor of Tibetan and Buddhist studies at the University of Virginia, where he also directs the Generative Contemplation Initiative and the Tibetan and Himalayan Library. He has spent many years living all over the Tibetan world in Asia, including extensive activities supporting Tibetans in documenting and understanding contemporary forms of knowledge and expression.

Janet Gyatso is Hershey Professor of Buddhist Studies at Harvard Divinity School. She works on Tibetan Buddhist literature and culture, and has published books on autobiographical writing in Tibet, memory in Buddhism, women in Tibetan history, and on the relationship between traditional Tibetan medicine and Buddhism. She is currently working on Tibetan cultural ideas around "interdependence," and a book in animal ethics.

Jue Liang is Assistant Professor of Religious Studies and Severance Professor in the History of Religion at Case Western Reserve University in Cleveland, Ohio.

Tashi Dekyid Monet (ইন্সের্ম্প্রাস্থ্রির্ম্বর্) is a Tibetan scholar and author of children's literature. She has recently completed her PhD degree from University of Virginia. Her dissertation, Knowing with Indigenous Land: Rekindling the Embers of Tibet's Ancestral Knowing in Education, explored how Tibetan Land and place-based traditions constitute a vital, ancient, and dynamic Indigenous Land education and ways of knowing.

Annabella Pitkin is associate professor of Buddhism and East Asian religions at Lehigh University. She is the author of Renunciation and Longing: The Life of a Twentieth-Century Himalayan Buddhist Saint (2022), which explores themes of renunciation, memory, and teacher-student relationship in the life of Khunu Lama Tenzin Gyaltsen.

Miranda Arocha Smith is a Doctoral Candidate in Buddhist Studies at Northwestern University. She holds an MTS in Buddhist Studies from Harvard Divinity School (2015), and an MFA in Creative Writing with a focus in poetry from University of Texas at El Paso (2012). In 2021–2022, she was awarded a research fellowship by the China-U.S. Scholars Program for the study of Tibetan poetry.

Andrew S. Taylor is Assistant Professor of Religious Studies at the College of Saint Scholastica in Duluth, Minnesota.

Nicole Willock is an associate professor of Asian Religions at Old Dominion University in Norfolk, Virginia. Translating from Tibetan and Chinese languages, her research looks at the intersections of Tibetan literature, especially poetics, religious studies, and intellectual history. She is the recipient of FLAS fellowships, the Fulbright-Hays DDRA, and the American Council of Learned Societies' (ACLS) Robert H.N. Ho Family Foundation Research Fellowship in Buddhist Studies. Her articles include "Thu'u bkwan's Literary Adaptations of the Life of Dgongs pa rab gsal" (2014); "Maps and Territory in the 1950s: The Writing of the Dan tig dkar chag—A Guide to Dan tig Monastery," (2016) and "Avadāna of Silver Flowers': A Discussion on Decolonization and Anti-Colonial Translation Practices for Tibetan poetry," co-written with Gedun Rabsal, in the Journal of Tibetan Literature (2022). Her first book Lineages of the Literary: Tibetan Buddhist Polymaths of Socialist China (Columbia University Press, 2021) was awarded the E. Gene Smith Inner Asia Book Prize (2024), which recognizes outstanding and innovative scholarship for a book on Inner Asia.

Eben Yonnetti holds a PhD from the Department of Religious Studies at the University of Virginia. His research examines the transmission and localization of Tibetan Buddhism in East and Southeast Asia in the 20th and 21st centuries.in Education, explored how Tibetan Land and place-based traditions constitute a vital, ancient, and dynamic Indigenous Land education and ways of knowing.